MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Ext'd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Definitions.

SECT. 1.—"TRADE."

1. Operations of a commercial character.—We may reasonably say that it [the word "trade"] was intended to embrace a great variety of different operations, though all of a commercial character, something therefore like a warehouse, like a shop, like a counting house (KELLY, C.B.).

It was never the intention of the legislature so to limit the meaning of the word "trade" [to the business of buying & selling] (KELLY, C.B.).

No doubt the word "trade" was originally there [in the Bkpey. Acts] intended as applying only to persons who either bought or sold, or whose business was immediately cognate to the buying or selling of goods, but even then we find from time to time the words used in a much wider sense (POLLOCK, B.).—CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON & CHINA v. WILSON (1877),

8. — [—]—There can be no definition of the words “exercising a trade.” It is only another mode of expressing “carrying on a business”; but it certainly carries with it the meaning that the business or trade must be habitually or systematically exercised, & that it cannot apply to isolated transactions (LORD MORRIS).

19. Where trade or business is carried on.—Meaning of—Question of fact.—[“Where the trade is carried on”] may mean where the goods in respect of which trading is carried on are conveyed, made, bought or sold; or, speaking of land, where it is cultivated or used for any other purpose of profit. That makes the locality of the goods or the land which are the subjects of the trade to be in a certain sense the place where the trade is carried on, because it is the place where the things corporeally exist or are dealt with. But there is another sense, in which the conduct & management, the head & brain of the trading adventure, are situated in a place different from that in which the corporeal subjects of trading are to be found. It becomes therefore a question of fact (LORD HALSBURY, C.).—SAN PAULO (BRAZILIAN) RY. CO. v. CARTER, [1896] A. C. 31; 65 L. J. Q. B. 161; 73 L. T. 538; 60 J. P. 81, 452; 14 W. R. 336; 12 T. L. SUB-SECT. 2.—WHO ARE TRADERS.

20. Actor.—(1) The business of a travelling circus is not a trade.

(2) It is certain that no actor nor any person exhibiting like resp., gymnastic feats in public nor even the proprietor of a theatre would be a trader within the meaning of the Bkpey. Act now in force in any earlier Bkpey. Act (KELLY, C.B.).—SPEAK v. POWELL (1873), 1 L. R. 9 Exch. 25; 43 L. J. M. C. 19; 29 L. T. 434; 38 J. P. 8.

21. Auctioneer.—Auctioneers do not carry on a “trade” so as to make one partner liable upon a bill of exchange accepted in the firm name by his co-partner without the knowledge or authority of the former.—WHEATLEY v. SMITHIES, [1906] 2 K. B. 321; 75 L. J. K. B. 627; 95 L. T. 96; 54 W. R. 537; 22 T. L. R. 591; 50 Sol. Jo. 513, D. C.; revid. on other grounds, [1907] 2 K. B. 681, C. A.

Annotation: Refd. Higgins v. Beauchamp, [1911] 3 K. B. 1192.

22. Banker.—To an action of assumpsit by the indorsees against the indorser of a bill of exchange, deft. pleaded that the bill was made & indorsed after the passing of 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, which restrains spiritual persons from being occupied in any trade or dealing that plfts. were a banking co., of which certain spiritual persons holding benefices were partners & members; that the trade or business of a banker was carried on by the said co-partnership for gains & profits as well of those spiritual persons as others, contrary to the form of the statute; whereby the indorsement & the promise in the declaration mentioned were void in law: Held: the plea was good, & the trade of a banker was within the meaning of the statute.—HALL v. FRANKLIN (1838), 3 M. & W. 259; 1 Horn & H. 8; 7 L. J. Ex. 110; 2 Jur. 97; 150 E. R. 1141.

23. — (1) Banking is not strictly a trade (WILLES, J.).

(2) Farming & grazing . . . are businesses which have for their object the acquisition of gain (EMER, C.J.).

(3) “Business” has a more extensive signification than “trade” . . . It was never doubted that farming was a “business” though not a “trade” (WILLES, J.).

(4) Trade has the technical meaning of buying & selling (WILLES, J.).—HARRIS v. AMERY (1865), 1 L. R. 1 C. P. 148; Hop. & Ph. 294; Har. & Ruth. 357; 35 L. J. C. P. 89; 13 L. T. 504; 30 J. P. 56; 12 Jur. N. S. 165; 14 W. R. 139.

24. Civil servant—Sub-postmaster.—A sub-post office carried on with a chemist’s shop on premises is outside a covenant “Trading to be restricted to chemistry & druggists’ business & dentist or doctor” as the office of a sub-postmaster is a branch of the public service, in the nature of a monopoly, at a fixed remuneration, & cannot be said to be “trading.”—*FRAMPTON v. 30. Landowner decoying wild fowl.—Every man that has a property may employ it for his pleasure & profit, as for alluring & procuring decoy ducks to come to his pond. To learn the trade of seducing other ducks to come there in order to be taken is not prohibited either by the law of the land or the moral law: but it is as lawful to use art to seduce them, to catch them, & destroy them for the use of mankind, as to kill & destroy wild fowl or tame cattle. It has been said that a person engaged in a trade violating the law of the country cannot support an action against another for hindering him in that illegal traffic. That I entirely accede to, but it does not apply to this case. The same principle is applicable to the case where a person has been taken into partnership on the terms that on the expiration of the partnership the goodwill of the business shall belong solely to the other partner.

(2) It is said, indeed, that he may not represent himself as a successor of the old firm, or as carrying on a continuation of their business (LORD HERSHELL).

(3) They (i.e. the Ct. of Appeal in the case of Leggott v. Barrett, No. 903, post) thought they could not on any just principle prevent deft. from supplying a man with goods if he applied for them; that there was no implied obligation upon him, either legal or moral, to shut his door against a customer who came to him of his own free will; that a sale of goodwill did not involve an implied contract not to deal with any customers of the old business the goodwill of which was sold (LORD HERSHELL).

(4) An express covenant not to carry on business would be incapable of being enforced as a restraint of trade if it was larger than the necessity of the case, having regard to the particular character of the business demanded, or, perhaps, unless it was restricted in some way either in time or space (LORD DAVEY).

(5) Generally speaking, it means much more than what LORD ELDON took it to mean in Crutwell v. Lye, No. 880, post. . . . Often it happens that the good will is the very sap & life of the business without which the business would yield little or no fruit. It is the whole advantage whatever it may be of the reputation & connection of the firm which may have been built up by years of honest work or gained by lavish expenditure of money (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(6) He may advertise himself as having been a partner in or the founder or manager of the business which he has sold provided he does not represent that the business which he is carrying on is the same business as or identical with that which he has sold. It is well settled that he may do all this (LORD DAVEY).

(7) The common law has always been jealous of any interference with trade (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—TREGO v. HUNT, [1896] A. C. 7; 65 L. J. Ch. 1; 73 L. T. 511; 44 W. R. 225; 12 T. L. R. 80, H. L.; revers., [1895] 1 Ch. 462, C. A.

47. —.—.]—An importer may acquire a valuable reputation for himself & his wares by his care in selection, or his precautions in transit & storage or because his local character is such that the article acquires a value by his testimony to its genuineness. But apart from contract or misrepresentation there is nothing to prevent a person from acquiring goods from a manufacturer & selling them in competition with him, even in a country into which the manufacturer, or his agent has been the sole importer.

Apldts. sought to restrain resps. from selling in India a well known brand of cigarettes which for some years they alone had been importing into & selling in India; they were assignees of the trade mark & goodwill in India. Resps. having bought over 21 millions of the cigarettes cheaply from purchasers from the manufacturers, who had granted aplts. the sole rights for India, were able to undersell aplts. The sales by resps. involved no breach of contract, misrepresentation or infringement; further it was not shown that aplts. had acquired any independent reputation as importers:—Held: the suit was not maintainable.—*IMPERIAL TOBACCO CO. 49. — For any remuneration desired.] — Every man has a right to work for the best price he can get; but, if others choose to work for less than the usual price, the law will not permit that violence should be committed towards them, or towards those by whom they are employed, or those with whom they are connected.—*R. v. 50. — By any method desired.] This was an action by which plffs. sought to enforce a bond against defts. The condition of the bond recited that defts. & seventeen other obligors, being respectively, owners & occupiers of mills & other premises in Wigan & the neighbourhood, carried on their business of spinners & weavers of cotton yarn & cloth, & employed many workpeople & servants; & that certain societies or combinations subsisted in the neighbourhood amongst divers persons, whereby persons willing to be employed were deterred by a reasonable fear of social persecution & other injuries from hiring themselves to work at the said establishments; & that thereby the legal control of the obligors over their property & establishments was injuriously interfered with; & that these combinations were sustained by funds arbitrarily levied & extracted from the workmen employed by the obligors & receiving wages from them. . . . The question is, whether this is a bond in restraint of trade, & we think it is so. Prima facie it is the privilege of a trader in a free country, in all matters not contrary to law, to regulate his own mode of carrying it on according to his own discretion & choice. If the law has in any matter regulated or restrained his mode of doing this, the law must be obeyed. But no power short of the general law ought to restrain his free discretion. Now here the obligors to this bond have clearly put themselves into a situation of restraint. . . . We see no way of avoiding the conclusion that, if a bond of this sort between masters is capable of being enforced at law, an agreement to the same effect amongst workmen must be equally legal & enforceable, & so we shall be giving a legal effect to combinations of workmen for the purpose of raising wages, & make their strikes capable of being enforced at law. We think that the legislature have been contented to make such strikes not punishable, & certainly they never contemplated them as being the subject of enforcement by a suit at law, on the part of the body of delegates, against any workmen who might have been seduced by some designing person to sign an engagement with penalty to continue in the strike as long as a majority were for holding out (per cur.). *HILTON v. 51. — — — — —.] —Owners of ships, in order to secure a carrying trade exclusively for themselves & at profitable rates, formed an association & agreed that the number of ships to be sent by members of the assocn. to the loading port, the division of cargoes & the freights to be demanded, should be the subject of regulation; that a rebate of 5 per cent. on the freights should be allowed to all shippers who shipped only with members; & that agents of members should be prohibited on pain of dismissal from acting in the interest of competing shipowners; any member to be at liberty to withdraw on giving certain notices.

Plffs., who were shipowners excluded from the assocn., sent ships to the loading port to endeavour to obtain cargoes. The associated owners thereupon sent more ships to the port, underbid plffs., & reduced freights so low that plffs. were obliged to carry at unremunerative rates. They also threatened to dismiss certain agents if they loaded plffs.' ships, & circulated a notice that the rebate of 5 per cent. would not be allowed to any person who shipped cargoes on plffs.' vessels. Plffs. having brought an action for damages against the associated owners alleging a conspiracy to injure plffs.:—Held: (1) since the acts of defts. were done with the lawful object of protecting & extending their trade & increasing their profits, & since they had not employed any unlawful means, plffs. had no cause of action.

Now it is not denied & cannot be even argued that prima facie a trader in a free country in all matters "not contrary to law may regulate his own mode of carrying on his trade according to his own discretion & choice." This is the language of ALDERSON, B. (in Hilton v. Eckersley, No. 50, ante), & no authority, indeed no argument, has been directed to qualify that leading proposition (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(2) Intimidation, violence, molestation, or the procuring of people to break their contracts, are all of them unlawful acts; & I entertain no doubt that a combination to procure people to do such acts is a conspiracy & unlawful (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(3) Acts done by a trader in the lawful way of his business, although by the necessary results of effective competition interfering injuriously with the trade of another, are not the subject of any action. Of course it is otherwise, as pointed out by LORD HOLT, if the acts complained of, although done in the way & under the guise of competition or other lawful right, are in themselves violent or purely malicious, or have for their ultimate object injury to another from ill-will to him, & not the pursuit of lawful rights (LORD FIELD).

(4) It was contended that the agreement between defts. to act in combination which was proved to exist, was illegal as being in restraint of trade. I think that it was so, in the sense that it was void, & could not have been enforced against any of defts. who might have violated it. But it does not follow that the entering into such an agreement would, as contended, subject the persons doing so to an indictment for conspiracy (LORD HANNEN).—*MOGUL S.S. Co. v. The general question upon this record is, whether this bond, being made in restraint of trade, be good? . . . A special consideration being set forth in the condition, which shows that it was reasonable for the parties to enter into it, the same is good . . . but with this constant diversity, viz. where the restraint is general not to exercise a trade throughout the kingdom, & where it is limited to a particular place (per CUR.).

Therefore, counts setting forth the same, & averring, by way of breaches, that deff. travelled into the districts of pltf., & sold boxes therein:—Held: good, on general demurrer.

(2) It is said that the effect of this agreement is to create a monopoly; & that, by upholding its validity, we shall lead to other combinations for monopolising trades. If the brewers or distillers of London were to come to the agreement suggested, many other persons would soon be found to prevent the result anticipated; & the consequence would, perhaps, be that the public would obtain the

If this were so, & the parties proposed by their agreement to endeavour to prevent competition generally, there might be weight in the objection; but the effect of the agreement is only that the one co. shall not compete or interfere with the other upon the particular line mentioned in the agreement (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—SHREW-BURY & BIRMINGHAM RY. Pltf. exacted similar agreements from all their trade purchasers, & this was known to defts., who were large storekeepers & sold tyres by retail to the public.

In Jan. 1912, defts. ordered tyres of pltf.' make from D. & co., & by an agreement purporting to be made between defts. & D. & co. in consideration of D. & co.'s allowing them certain discounts off pltf.' list prices, they agreed (inter alia), not to sell or offer any motor tyres of pltf.' make to any private customer at less than the list prices. 79. Restrictions as to user—Lease of machinery.]—Plffs. in Nov. 1900, leased to defts., a firm of boot manufacturers, certain machines called the Consolidated Lasting Machines for a term of twenty years unless sooner determined by the lessors. This agreement for the hire of the machinery contained a condition that the lessee should use the machinery to its full capacity so far as the number & kind of boots & shoes made in the factory would permit. There was a provision that a sum of 3d. for each 1,000 revolutions of the main shaft of the Consolidated Lasting Machine should be paid by defts. Defts. after using this machinery for three years refused to use it any more, giving as their reason that it could not be used by them so as to enable them to compete with any commercial success with rival firms & now used other machinery in its place.

On an action for damages for breach of contract:—Held: defts. might have been foolish in entering into such a contract, but it could not be said it was a contract contrary to public policy. Upon the construction of the contract the machines could not be said to be worked to their full capacity unless they were worked continuously during working hours. It was immaterial whether there was now a better machine for the same purpose. Plffs.' machines, on the evidence, were quite satisfactory at least for some of the work in defts.' factory, & defts. were bound to use them for all work which they were capable of doing without regard to the fact that another machine could do it better & cheaper. Plffs. to be entitled to an inquiry as to damages.—BRITISH UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO., LTD. v. SOMERVILLE BROTHERS (1906), 95 L. T. 711.

80. ———— ————]—By various leases in 1903 & 1901 applts. leased to resps. for twenty years machines made & used for certain processes in the manufacture of shoes, containing in each case a "tying clause," the effect of which was to prohibit the use by resps. in the said manufacture of any machines not leased by applts. Some additional leases were granted of other & allied machines to be used for certain ancillary processes in the same manufacture. These latter resps. called upon applts. to remove, but continued to work the former in conjunction with machines not leased to them by applts.

To an action for an injunction & damages resps. pleaded that applts. by false representations that they were patentees in respect of their machines, had induced them to take the said leases; & that the covenants therein, by reason of their unjust & oppressive nature & of the practical monopoly which applts. had acquired in Canada in the manufacture & supply of shoe-making machinery were in restraint of trade & void:—Held: (1) as resps. had not repudiated the leases after discovery of the alleged false representations, but had continued to work the demised machines & paid the royalties reserved, they had elected to treat the leases as subsisting, & could not afterwards avoid them; (2) as the tying clauses merely prescribed the mode of user, & were not severable from the rest of the contracts, they could not be separately repudiated; (3) the covenants were not in restraint of trade. The shoe manufacturers of Canada were at liberty to hire or not to hire applts.' machines on applts.'

Colbourne, [1914] 2 Ch. 533; British Actors Film Co. v. Glover, [1918] 1 K. B. 299.

82. Preliminary service as apprentice—Before carrying on trade.—Person carrying on trade as trustee.]—A person carrying on a trade as a trustee only for children only, is not liable to the penalty of the statute, for carrying on a trade without serving an apprenticeship.—MEAZIAN v. PEARSALL (1806), 6 Esp. 1; 170 E. R. 811, N. P.

SUB-SECT. 2.—THE SLAVE TRADE.

A. In General.

83. Status of slavery—Local existence.]—

(1) Where certain persons, who have been slaves in a foreign country where slavery was tolerated by law, escaped thence & got on board a British ship of war on the high seas: Held: a British subject resident in that country, who claimed the slaves as his property, could not maintain an action against the commander of the ship for harbouring the slaves after notice.

(2) [The Ct. of Admlty.] cannot lend its assistance in the condemnation of a vessel, on the ground that it is engaged in a traffic which, according to the municipal laws of the country to which claimant belongs, is no wrong (BAYLEY, J.).

(3) The moment they put their feet on board of a British man of war, not lying within the waters of East Florida, where, undoubtedly, the laws of that country would prevail, those persons who before had been slaves, were free. . . . If any injury had been done to them they would have had a remedy by applying to the laws of this country for redress. . . . If any force had been used by the master or any person in his assistance, can it be doubted that the slaves might have brought an action of trespass? . . . Nay, if the slave . . . had resisted the force & his death had ensued in the course of such resistance, can there be any doubt that every one who had contributed to that death would, according to our laws, be guilty of murder? (BEST, J.).

(4) A slave has no country, he is not reared by or for his parents, or for his own benefit, but for that of his master, he is incapable of compact (BEST, J.).

(5) Plff. had no right in these persons, except in their character of slaves. . . . & according to the principles of the English law, such a right cannot be considered as warranted by the general law of nature. I do not mean to say that particular circumstances may not introduce a legal relation to that extent; but assuming that there may be such a relation, it can only have a local existence, where it is tolerated by the particular law of the place (HOLROYD, J.).

(6) The law of slavery is a law in invitum; & when a party gets out of the territory where it prevails & out of the power of his master & gets under the protection of another power, without any wrongful act done by the party giving that protection, the right of the master, which is interest if it is obtained by breaches of the law, even although it could have been obtained without breaches of the law it might not have been contrary to the public interest, but might have operated to the public advantage. PART IV. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

b. Validity of bye-law—Limiting number of shop licences.]—A bye-law of a town passed under 39 Vict. c. 26, s. 2, s. 3 (O), limiting the number of shop licences to be issued in the town to one, & directing the holder of such licence to confine the business of his shop exclusively to the keeping & selling of liquor:—Held: bad, as being in effect prohibitory & creating a monopoly.—Re BROMBY & TOWN OF BOWMANVILLE CORPN. (1876), 38 U. C. R. 580.—CAN.

c. — Authorising mayor to grant trading licences.]—38 Vict. c. 88, authorising the mayor of Fredericton to grant to any person wishing to engage in any trade, profession, occupation or calling in the city, a licence to engage therein, is not ultra vires as being an interference with "trade or commerce."—*Ex p. 87. — ——[1. A contract for sale of a slave is good here; the sale is a matter to which the law properly & readily attaches, & will maintain the price according to the agreement. But if the person of the slave himself is immediately the object of inquiry it makes a very material difference (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).

(2) The power of a master over his slave has been extremely different, in different countries. The state of slavery is of such a nature that it is incapable of being introduced on any reasons, moral or political; but only positive law, which preserves its force long after the reasons, occasion, & time itself from whence it was created, is erased from memory: it is so odious that nothing can be suffered to support it, but positive law (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—SOMERSET v. 95. Effect of contract of service with slave—Manumission.—An infant slave in the West Indies executed an indenture, by which he covenanted to serve B. for a certain term of years as his servant, & B. covenanted to do certain things on his part; B. then came to England with the slave. In an action against A. who had seduced him from the service of B., A. was not permitted to allege that the contract was void, as being made by an infant & a slave, & therefore that the declaration, which stated him to have been retained as a servant for a term of years, was not proved; for the Ct. held that the effect of such a contract might be the manumission of the slave, & consequently that it was for his own benefit, & being for his own benefit, that it was, at most, only voidable by the infant himself.—KEANE v. BOYCOTT (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 511; 126 E. R. 676.

Plff. was accordingly manumitted & having served the captain upon the homeward voyage, commenced an action against him to recover wages for that voyage upon a quantum meruit.—Held: he was estopped by his covenant from claiming more than the sum stipulated.—WILLIAMS v. BROWN (1892), 3 Bos. & P. 69; 127 E. R. 39.

104. Right to bounty—Flag officer.—Flag officer entitled to share of bounty given for seizure of slaves.—THE DOLORES (1819), 2 Dods. 413; 165 E. R. 1531.

105. —.— Governor of colony—Absent at time of seizure.—The governor of a colony being the person to whom the general management of such colony is entrusted is the person entitled to the bounties payable in respect of a seizure of slaves, even though he is absent from the colony at the time the seizure is made.—Re BOUNTIES PAYABLE IN RESPECT OF SEIZURE OF CERTAIN SLAVES AT SIERRA LEONE (1863), Brown, & Lush, 148; 32 L. J. P. M. & A. 189; 9 Jur. N. S. 1251; 167 E. R. 322.

106. —.— Application of prize principles—Joint capture.—The principles of joint capture in prize cases apply to vessels associated in the capture of ships engaged in the slave trade; therefore, where the actual capture was made by one of two vessels associated for such purpose, the other, which had joined in the chase & rendered subsequent assistance, held entitled to share in the bounty for the slaves & in the proceeds of the ship, stores, & cargo.—THE AVISO (1826), 2 Hag. Adm. 31; 166 E. R. 155.

109. —.—.]—Cases of claims to joint capture of slave vessels are to be governed by the principles established in the Prize Ct. of Admty. with respect to claims to joint capture in time of war; subject, however, to such exceptions as the distinction between the respective cases may create; e.g. where, in the former instance, a claim to joint capture is supported solely by the evidence of releasing witnesses.

Principles as to what will constitute association between ships of war. An order was given by a superior to an inferior officer, by which the latter was prevented joining with his vessel in the chase of a slave ship, which was afterwards captured by the vessel of the former:—Held: a claim to joint capture was sustainable.—THE SOCIÉDADE FELIZ (1843), 2 Wm. Rob. 155; 2 Notes of Cases, 430; 4 L. T. 528; 7 Jur. 956; 166 E. R. 713; previous proceedings (1842), 1 Wm. Rob. 303.

Annotation:—Apld. The Brazil (1856), Sw. 75.

110. —.—.]—In questions of joint capture, the onus probandi is on the claimant, & in favour of the actual captor. The rule, that no claim for joint capture can be established on the sole evidence of the crew claiming, is not so strict in slave cases as in prize of war. It appearing in the evidence that the surrender of the slave took place before she was seen by the vessel claiming; such claim of joint capture held not to be established.—THE BRAZIL (1856), Sw. 75; 1 L. the prize before capture is important, but is not absolutely required as in cases of prize of war.

At daylight on a morning nearly calm, her Majesty's steamships Falcon & Dart were in company, each under canvas only; each had authority to capture vessels engaged in the slave trade; but the Falcon was on her voyage home. A vessel, which afterwards proved to be equipped for the slave trade, appeared in sight of both ships: the Dart got up steam & went in chase. The captain of the Falcon, deeming the Dart sufficient for the purpose, did not get up steam, but continued his course. The chase lasted a few hours only; & the capture by the Dart took place in daylight, in sight of those on deck of the Falcon, at the distance of about seven miles. The prize was destroyed as unseaworthy. Proceedings of adjudication subsequently took place, & bounties were awarded under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 73, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 47, s. 2:—Held: the Falcon was entitled to share as joint captor.—BRIG (NAME UNKNOWN) (1864), Brown, & Jarsh, 370; 167 E. 116. Pistol.—On the sale of a pistol to a person who being a householder purposes to use such pistol only in his own house or the curtilage thereof it is necessary under Pistols Act, 1903 (c. 18), s. 3, not only that reasonable proof of these facts shall be given to the vendor, but also that the intending purchaser shall produce to the vendor a statement to that effect signed by himself & either by a police officer or a justice of the peace.—*MATTHEWS v. 117. — — — — —] Air pistol.—An air pistol is not per se a firearm within the definition of "firearm" in Firearms Act, 1920 (c. 43), s. 12 (1), but it is an "air gun or air rifle" within the proviso which empowers a Secretary of State to make rules declaring certain types of air guns & air rifles to be specially dangerous, & if it is so declared, it is to be deemed to be a firearm.—SAINT v. HOCKLEY (1925), 41 T. L. R. 555; 69 Sol. Jo. 575, D. C.

118. Prohibition of importation.—Of arms, ammunition, gunpowder or "any other goods"—"Any other goods" must be ejusdem generis.—(Customs Consolidation Act, 1870 (c. 36), s. 43, provides that: "The importation of arms, ammunition, gunpowder, or any other goods may be prohibited by Proclamation or Order in Council":—Held: in that sect. the meaning of the words "any other goods" is restricted to things of the same class as those previously specified, & therefore, a Proclamation purporting to prohibit the importation of an article which was not of that class was illegal & invalid.—A.-G. v. BROWN, [1920] 1 K. B. 773; 89 L. J. K. B. 1178; 122 L. T. 558; 84 J. P. 113; 36 T. L. R. 165; on appeal, [1921] 3 K. B. 29, C. A.

119. Dye stuffs.—Dyestuffs (Import Regulation) Act, 1920 (c. 77), s. 1 (1), prohibits certain imports "with a view to the safeguarding of the dye-making industry."

These forbidden imports are (a) "all synthetic organic dyestuffs, colours & colouring matters," & (b) "all organic intermediate products used in the manufacture of" the same:—Held: manufactured articles containing a minute & commercially, non-separable ingredient of the prohibited matter fell within the prohibition, though the articles themselves, artists' colours & materials & copying ink pencils, would be of no direct use in the dye making industry.—*WHYTE, RIDSDALE & Co. v. 122. ——The old cases of Claygate v. Batchelor, No. 121, ante, & Clerk v. Taylors of Exeter, No. 176, post, cannot now be considered law. They undoubtedly proceeded on the ground that all covenants & agreements in restraint of trade however limited are altogether void, but in modern times the cts. have held that partial restraints of trade may be allowed when they are reasonable in extent on the ground that such restraints are rather beneficial to general commerce than injurious to it (POLLOCK, C.B.).—GREEN v. 125. Must conform to recognised principles.—By an agreement in writing deft. agreed to serve plff., who was a tailor, at Weybridge, as a cutter, & he further agreed "not to enter into any business arrangement in competition with or that would in any way interfere with the business carried on by" plff., "at his establishments in Weybridge or the City of London, or at any of his addresses of the future":—Held: the agreement was unreasonable as being too wide.

All these agreements in restraint of trade are prima facie bad unless coming within well recognised principles (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—BEETHAM v. FRASER (1904), 21 T. L. R. 8; 19 Sol. Jo. 14, D. C.

126. Contract containing servile incidents — Invalid.—DAVIES v. DAVIES, No. 406, post.

127. ——By an indenture made between the mtgor., a clerk in the employment of deft., & plff., a money-lender, the mtgor., who was indebted in various sums to creditors whom the money-lender agreed to pay on having the repayment secured to him in manner thereafter appearing, assigned to plff. (inter alia) all the salary, wages, or other moneys then or thereafter during the continuance of the security to become due to him under his employment with defts. or with any other employers to hold to plff. absolutely, but subject to a proviso for redemption. The mtgor. then covenanted that he would repay plff. by certain instalments; that during the continuance of the security he would not, without the express sanction in writing of plff. determine his engagement with defts. or other his employers for the time being; that he would not borrow or attempt to borrow any money or part with, sell or pledge his furniture, chattels, or effects, or obtain or endeavour to obtain credit or permit any one to pledge his credit, save his wife in the case of ordinary tradesmen's books for weekly settlement, or make himself or his property answerable for any sum of money whether legally or morally; & that he would not, without plff.'s consent in writing, remove from his then dwelling-house or take any other. Plff. alleging that the mtgor. had committed breaches of the covenants contained in the indenture, gave notice of the assignment to defts. & brought an action to recover salary due from them to the mtgor.:—Held: the contract was entire & indivisible, & was bad as being contrary to public policy inasmuch as it unduly & improperly fettered the mtgor.'s liberty of action & the free disposal of his property.

It appears to me that it is not using overstrained or poetical language to say it made this unfortunate man the slave of the money-lender (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—HORWOOD v. MILLAR'S TIMBER & TRADING CO., LTD., [1917] 1 K. B. 305; 86 L. J. K. B. 190; 115 L. T. 805; 33 T. L. R. 86; 61 Sol. Jo. 114, C. A.

128. No offence at common law.—A-G. OF COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA v. ADELAIDE S.S. CO., LTD., No. 68, ante.

129. How far court will consider illegality—Agreement ex facie illegal.—Where an action is brought on a contract which is ex facie illegal as being in unreasonable restraint of trade, the ct. will decline to enforce the contract, irrespective of whether illegality is pleaded or not; but, where the question of illegality depends upon the surrounding circumstances, as a general rule, the ct. will not entertain the question unless it is raised by the pleadings.

Plff. co. was a combination of salt manufacturers formed for the purpose of regulating supply & keeping up prices, & it had the practical control of the inland sale market. The members of the co. were entitled to be appointed as its distributors, i.e. agents to sell on behalf of the co. the salt which it had purchased from them. Defts., who had not joined the combination agreed to sell to the co. for four years 18,000 tons of salt per annum, of which a certain proportion was to be table salt, at a fixed uniform price per ton, & undertook not to make any other salt for sale. They were to have the option of buying back the whole or a part of their table salt in each year at plff. co.'s current selling price & were to be appointed distributors on the same terms as the co.'s other distributors. Defts. having sold salt in violation of this agreement, pltf. co. sued them for breach of contract. Defts. did not by their defence raise the issue of illegality, but they sought to rely on certain facts & documents admitted in evidence at the trial upon other issues as showing that the agreement was illegal as against public policy:—Held: having regard to the form of the pleadings, the surrounding circumstances could not be looked at for the purpose of determining the illegality of the agreement, & the agreement was not ex facie illegal.—NORTH WESTERN SALT CO., LTD. v. ELECTROLYTIC ALKALI CO., LTD., [1914] A. C. 461; 83 L. J. K. B. 530; 110 L. T. 852; 30 T. L. R. 313; 58 Sol. Jo. 338, H. L.; reversg., [1913] 3 K. B. 422.

131. Who may enter into agreement—Employer & employee.] Pltf. carried on business at Kidderminster as a draper, tailor, & general outfitter. By a contract of employment of deft. by pltf., after reciting that deft. had requested pltf. to employ him as an assistant in his business at an annual salary & commission on turnover above a certain amount in the tailoring department & that pltf. was willing to do so only upon his entering into the agreement not to trade in opposition to him thereafter expressed, deft. agreed that he would not at any time thereafter "either on his own account or on that of any wife of his or in partnership with or as assistant, servant, or agent to any other person, persons or co. carry on or be in any way directly or indirectly concerned in any of the following trades or businesses; that is to say, the trade or business of a tailor, dressmaker, general draper, milliner, hatter, haberdasher, gentlemen's, ladies' or children's outfitter at any place within a radius of ten miles of" Kidderminster. Dft. subsequently set up business as a tailor at Worcester, outside the ten miles' limit, but obtained & executed tailoring orders in Kidderminster. The Div. Ct. held that the covenant was wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of pltf.'s business, but that it was severable by striking out the enumerated trades except that of a tailor & limiting its operation to the trade or business of a tailor, & granted an injunction restricted to the tailoring trade:—Held: (1) the covenant being a single covenant for the protection of pltf.'s entire business & not several covenants for the protection of his several businesses could not be severed; (2) even if the covenant could be severed by confining it to the tailoring business it would still be void as being in restraint of competition.

(3) It is the covenantee, resp. here, who has to show that the restriction sought to be imposed upon the covenantor goes no further than is reasonable for the protection of his business (ATKIN & YOUNGER, L.J.J.).

(4) The restraint must be reasonable not only in the interests of the covenantee, but in the interests of both the contracting parties (ATKIN & YOUNGER, L.J.J.).

(5) An employer is not entitled by a covenant taken from his employee to protect himself after the employment has ceased against his former servant's competition per se, although a purchaser of goodwill is entitled to protect himself against such competition on the part of his vendor (ATKIN & YOUNGER, L.J.J.).

(6) Previously accepted rules as to the doctrine of severance require careful application if not entire reconsideration (ATKIN & YOUNGER, L.J.J.).

(7) I think . . . it is still the law that a contract can be severed if the severed parts are independent of one another & can be severed without the severance affecting the meaning of the part remaining (LORD STERNDAL, M.R.).

(8) It must now I think be recognised in all cts. that there is every difference in the matter of validity between such a covenant as we find here embodied in a contract of service & the same covenant when found in an agreement for the sale of goodwill (ATKIN & YOUNGER, L.J.J.).

(9) An employer may not, after his servant has left his employment, prevent that servant from using his own skill & knowledge in his trade or profession, even if acquired when in the employers service. That skill & knowledge are only placed at the employer's disposal during the employment (YOUNGER, L.J.).—ATTWOOD v. LAMONT, [1920] 3 K. B. 571; 90 L. J. K. B. 121; 124 L. T. 108; 36 T. L. 133. Question of agreement one of fact.]—A. having printed a work, sold 300 copies to B., a bookseller, at 40s. a copy, binding himself not to sell to others, in quires, under 18s., & in single copies under 50s. a copy, until B.'s 300 were sold, or his consent was obtained. In his letter, which constituted the agreement, he said to B., "I do not expect you to sell under 48s. & 50s., but do as you like." When B. had sold a part of the 300 copies, he went into partnership with C., & transferred all his stock at the cost price. He also sold some copies at 15s. & 46s. A., in contravention of his agreement, sold under the stipulated prices; but, on being threatened with proceedings by B., persuaded D., who had purchased the principal part, to consent to give them back, if it would satisfy B. D. had an interview with B., & told him this. D. said, that he understood the arrangement was a settlement of the difference, & that B. went away from the interview perfectly satisfied. In an action by B. against A. for a breach of the agreement:—Held: neither the underselling by B. nor the transfer of the stock to the partnership, were grounds of non-suit; but the arrangement with D. was an answer to the action, if the jury thought it made an end of the dispute between the parties.—*BENNING v. SECT. 2.—VALIDITY OF AGREEMENTS

SUB-SECT. 1.—ESSENTIALS.

A. Reasonableness.

(a) In General.

135. Contract must be reasonable.—HOMER v. ASHFORD, No. 250, post.

136. —.—[A. agreed to serve B. & C., partners, for six years at a fixed salary, & not to be employed for any other person during that time; at the expiration of which he was to be admitted into the partnership, but no terms were settled. A. left the service of B. & C. during the term, & commenced business in the same trade: Held: both parts of the agreement must be taken together, & as one part could not, on account of its vagueness, be enforced, the et. would not interfere to restrain A. from carrying on his business.

[The agreement] would afford a strong reason against the interference of the et. for it would be what is commonly termed a hard bargain (SHADWELL, V.-C.). —KIMBERLEY v. JENNINGS (1836), 6 Sim. 340; 5 L. J. Ch. 115; 58 E. R. 621; sub nom. KIMBERLEY v. YEO, KIMBERLEY v. JENNINGS, Donnelly, 1.

137. —.—(1) Agreements in restraint of trade are against public policy & void, unless the restraint they impose is partial only, & reasonable in relation to the objects of the contract; & also unless they are made upon a real & bond fide consideration. Where the object of an agreement is to parcel out the stevedoring business of a particular port amongst the parties to it, & so to prevent competition, at least amongst themselves, & also, it may be, to keep up the price to be paid for the work:—Held: such agreement is not invalid if carried into effect by provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose, though the effect of them might be to create a partial restraint upon the power of the parties to exercise their trade.

(2) A provision that if a particular merchant named in the agreement should refuse to allow the stevedoring of any ship to be done by the party entitled to it under the agreement, & should require one of the other parties to do it, such party so required should give an equivalent to the party who lost the stevedoring, is not unreasonable either as regards the party entitled or as regards the merchant.

(3) A provision that in the case of ships passing out of the hands of merchants named in the contract into the hands of other merchants, who should not choose to employ the party entitled under the agreement, all the parties thereto are deprived of the work, cannot be justified. It is obviously detrimental to the public, is entirely beyond anything the legitimate interests of the parties required, & is utterly unprofitable & unnecessary, at least for any purpose which can be avowed.

(4) Cts. are not disposed to measure the adequacy of the consideration, if a real & bond fide consideration exists (per CTR.).—COLLINS v. LOCKE (1879), 4 App. Cas. 674; 48 L. J. P. C. 68; 41 L. T. 292; 28 W. R. 189, P. C.

138. —.—(1) There is no absolute rule that a covenant in restraint of trade is void if it is unlimited in regard to space. The question in each case is whether the restraint extends further than is necessary for the reasonable protection of the covenantee. If it does not do that, the performance of the covenant will be enforced, even though the restriction be unlimited as to space. Pltfs. were champagne merchants doing business throughout England & the continent. Deft., who was in their employment, agreed that he would not for ten years after leaving their service engage in the champagne trade. Deft. subsequently commenced business as a retail wine merchant in London, selling champagne & other wines:—Held: although the agreement extended to the whole of England, & was, in fact, unlimited as to space, pltfs. were entitled to an injunction to restrain a breach of that agreement.

(2) The policy of the English law in favour of trade applies to foreigners trading in England equally with English subjects.—ROUSILLON v. ROUSILLON (1880), 14 Ch. D. 351; 49 L. J. Ch. 338; 42 L. T. 679; 11 J. P. 663; 28 W. R. 623.

Macartney, Macfarlane v. Macartney, [1921] 1 Ch. 522; Employers' Liability Assoc. Corp'n. v. Sedgwick, Collins, [1927] A. C. 95.

139. —. (1) A patentee & manufacturer of guns & ammunition for purposes of war covenanted with a co. to which his patents & business had been transferred that he would not for twenty-five years engage except on behalf of the co. either directly or indirectly in the business of a manufacturer of guns or ammunition:—Held: the covenant though unrestricted as to space was not, having regard to the nature of the business & the limited number of the customers, namely the Governments of this & other countries, wider than was necessary for the protection of the co., nor injurious to the public interests of this country; it was therefore valid & might be enforced by injunction.

(2) To a certain extent different considerations must apply in cases of apprenticeship & cases of that sort, on the one hand, & cases of the sale of a business or dissolution of partnership on the other. A man is bound to apprentice because he wishes to learn a trade & to practise it. A man may sell because he is getting too old for the strain & worry of business, or because he wishes for some other reason to retire from business altogether. Then there is obviously more freedom of contract between buyer & seller than between master & servant or between an employer & a person seeking employment (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(3) I would answer the argument in the words of TINDAL, C.J., in Rannie v. Irvine, No. 321, post. "If the contract is a reasonable one at the time it is entered into we are not bound to look out for improbable & extravagant contingencies in order to make it void" (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(4) When once it is admitted that whether the covenant be general or particular the question of its validity is alike determined by the consideration whether it exceeds what is necessary for the protection of the covenantee, the distinction between general & particular restraints ceases to be a distinction in point of law (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).

(5) The general policy of the law is opposed to all restraints upon liberty of individual action which are injurious to the interests of the state or community (LORD WATSON).

All restraints of trade of themselves, if there is nothing more, are contrary to public policy, & therefore void. That is the general rule. But there are exceptions. . . . It is a sufficient justification & indeed it is the only justification, if the restriction is reasonable, reasonable, that is, in reference to the interests of the parties concerned & reasonable in reference to the interests of the public (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—NORDENFELT v. 142. —. By an agreement in writing deft. agreed to appear at plffs.' theatre at Manchester at a salary of £60 per week. The agreement contained the following clause: "Prior to the commencement of this engagement & during its continuance or within six months afterwards, no artist shall perform at any place of entertainment within twenty miles of Manchester . . . without the written consent of the director. . . ." Deft. having been billed to appear at a theatre at Salford, in violation of this agreement & after leave to appear there had been refused her, plffs. brought this action, claiming an injunction:—Held: on the evidence, the restraint was reasonable, & therefore that the injunction claimed should be granted.

There are two questions to consider first, whether the restraint was reasonable in reference to the interests of the parties concerned; & secondly, even though reasonable in their interest, whether it was injurious to the public. If the restraint was not reasonable in the interest, or as it is sometimes expressed, for the protection of the interests of the parties concerned, it is against public policy & void. . . . There may be cases . . . in which even though the restraint is not unreasonable in the interest of the parties concerned, it may of itself be of such a character as to be injurious to the public, & in such cases, again, the restraint is void (WALTON, J.).—*TIVOLI, MANCHESTER, LTD. v. 154. — (1) In determining whether a covenant in restraint of trade is enforceable, a covenant exacted by the purchaser from the vendor on a sale of the goodwill of a business stands on a different footing from a covenant exacted by an employer against his employee; & semble in the latter case a covenant against competition per se will not be enforced.

(2) Pltf. co. were the leading manufacturers of hoisting machinery in the United Kingdom, & deflt. had been in the co.'s employment as draughtsman & otherwise from the time he left school. After several years' service deflt. was engaged by the co. as engineer for two years certain & thereafter, subject to four months' notice on either side, upon the terms of an agreement which contained a covenant by deflt. with the co. that he would not during a period of seven years from his ceasing to be employed by the co., either in the United Kingdom of Great Britain or Ireland, carry on either as principal, agent, servant, or otherwise, alone or jointly or in connection with any other person, firm, or co., or be concerned or assist, directly or indirectly, whether for reward or otherwise, in the sale or manufacture of pulley blocks, hand overhead runways, electric overhead runways, or hand overhead travelling cranes: Held: the covenant was wider than was required for the protection of pltf. co., & was not enforceable.

(3) It is not that such restraints must of themselves necessarily operate to the public injury but that it is against the policy of the common law to enforce them except in cases where there are special circumstances to justify them (LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON).

(4) The onus of proving such special circumstances must, of course, rest on the party alleging them. When once they are proved, it is a question of law for the decision of the judge whether they do or do not justify the restraint (LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON).

General rule.—DOWDEN & POOK, LTD. v. POOK,
No. 247, post.

157. — Nature of trade.]—MUMFORD v. GETHING, No. 448, post.

158. — (1) An agreement made in 1894 between pltf., a hardware manufacturer at Dudley, & deft., a young man of twenty-four, on deft., entering pltf.'s service, contained a restrictive clause that deft. would not, during his service or after the determination thereof, divulge to any person the secrets of pltf. or the mode of conducting his business, or any part thereof, or any information with regard to the same, or after the determination of such service work for or serve any other person or firm carrying on the same kind of business, or any part thereof, within a radius of twenty-five miles from pltf.'s words at Dudley, without his consent. In 1897 deft. left pltf.'s service, & in 1899, without his consent, entered the service of a firm carrying on a business similar to that of pltf. about three miles from his works. In an action by pltf. against deft. to restrain him from continuing in the service of the firm, & from any further breach of the agreement:—Held: pltf. was entitled to an injunction, since the restrictive clause was not void either as being unreasonable for pltf.'s protection, or as being unlimited in point of time & so binding deft. during his whole life.

(2) Evidence from persons in the trade is admissible to inform the ct. of its nature, & of what is customary in it, & of anything requiring attention in the mode of conducting it, & of any particular dangers requiring precautions, & what precautions are required in order to protect a person carrying on the business from injury by a person leaving his service. But the reasonableness of a contract depends on its true construction & legal effect, & is consequently a question for the ct., & on such a question the opinion of witnesses is out of place (LANDLEY, M.R.).

(3) Where a man of sufficient age & business capacity knowingly enters into a contract of service which is only in partial restraint of trade, I think the onus lies on him to prove that it goes beyond what is reasonably necessary (ROMER, J.J.).

(4) A covenant in restraint of trade will not be held to be wholly void merely because its language is wide enough to cover possible cases which would be unreasonable, but which were not within the contemplation of the parties. Where the restriction is so worded as to be divisible, the restraint will be held to be good so far as it is free from objection, & bad only as to those parts which are objectionable.—HAYNES v. DOMAN, [1899] 2 Ch. 13; 68 L. J. Ch. 419; 80 L. T. 569; 15 T. L. R. 354; 43 Sol. Jo. 553, C. A.

164. —. —. (1) Deft., while under age, entered the service of plffs., proprietors of a newspaper in a provincial town where a rival newspaper was established, as junior reporter under a written agreement which provided that he would not, after leaving plffs.' service, "either on his own account or in partnership with any other person, be connected, as proprietor, employee, or otherwise, with any other newspaper business carried on" in the town or within a radius of twenty miles. There was evidence that such a clause was most unusual, almost unique, in agreements of this class. Deft. having entered the service of the rival newspaper: Held: the restriction was wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of plffs.' interest & therefore could not be enforced; even had it been enforceable against an adult, it would not have been valid as against deft., who was an infant when he executed the agreement.

(2) It is for the ct. to consider whether, on the ground of public policy, such a covenant is or is not reasonable, whether it is or is not valid; & its validity depends upon whether it is more than is reasonably required for the protection of the covenantor. (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(3) It is also open to both parties to put before the ct. evidence of what is customary in such employment, because if a thing is customary it is in favour of its being considered on the one hand as reasonably necessary (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(4) The fact that the restriction is not limited in point of time has had a very great effect upon my mind. I do not think that any of the previous decisions of the ct. throw any doubt on the principle that the limitation with regard to time is a factor, & may be a most important factor, in deciding the question before the ct. whether the restriction is reasonably necessary or not (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(5) The question of reasonableness & public policy is a question of law for the judge; the evidence of plffs. that they required the restriction for their protection was no evidence at all on the point; so much so, indeed, that the question could not properly be put to them, because it is the very question that the judge had to determine: the admissible evidence is evidence of facts from which the judge could draw the conclusion whether the clause is reasonably necessary or not; evidence that plffs. or any other persons think it reasonably necessary is not admissible (FARWELL, L.J.).

(6) It is for plffs. to prove the sufficiency of their reasons, & that there were in fact weighty reasons; it is not enough for them to say that they think it reasonable & for the judge to say that it seems not unreasonable without any facts being proved to show the reasonable necessity for the clause (FARWELL, L.J.).

(7) I desire to read a passage from the speech of LORD MACNAGHTEN in Nordenfellt v. Maxim Nordenfellt Guns & Ammunition Co., No. 139, ante, where he says: "Restraints of trade & interference with individual liberty of action may be justified by the special circumstances of a particular case. It is a sufficient justification & indeed it is the only justification, if the restriction is reasonable, reasonable, that is, in reference to the interests of the parties concerned & reasonable in reference to the interests of the public, so framed & so guarded as to afford adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed, while at the same time it is in no way injurious to the public." The argument which has been addressed to us on behalf of resps. does not bring the case within that doctrine. That doctrine does not mean that an employer can prevent his employee from using the skill & knowledge in his trade or profession which he has learnt in the course of his employment by means of directions or instructions from the employer. That information & that additional skill he is entitled to use for the benefit of himself & the benefit of the public who gain the advantage of his having had such admirable instruction (FARWELL, L.J.). — *SIR W. 172. Of what matters judicial notice taken — Nature of trade. — By agreement between pltf. & deft., pltf., a milkman, agreed to keep deft. in his service, & deft. agreed to enter such service, for one month certain from the date of the agreement, & until the expiration a month's notice, to be given by either party to the other of them, of his or their intention of determining the said contract at the end of such month; in consideration whereof, deft. agreed that he would not, within the space of twenty-four months after quitting or being discharged from the same, carry on the business of a milkman within five miles from Northampton Square; & for further security, deft. agreed, that if within twenty-four calendar months after the determination of the service he should within such distance, etc., carry on the business of a milkman, he should be liable to certain penalties. The declaration, after stating mutual promises, averred, that deft. entered the service as agreed on, & remained until, etc., when he quitted & was discharged from the same. It then stated general performance by pltf. of his part of the agreement, & assigned for breach, that within twenty-four months after deft.'s quitting & being discharged from the said service, he did carry on the business of a milkman within five miles from Northampton Square:—Held: (1) the agreement it disclosed was not illegal; (2) under this agreement there might be other modes of determining the service than by a month's notice from either party; (3) at all events, it sufficiently appeared on the face of the declaration that the service of deft. was determined, according to the terms of the agreement; (4) if deft. had been improperly discharged by pltf. such wrongful discharge was no answer to the action, but would be merely the subject of a cross-action.

(5) Can we judiciously take notice of the nature of the occupation of the parties, or of the extent of the population in the area to which the restriction extends (MAULE, J.).

(6) When you are doubting as to the reasonableness of a restriction upon trade, the time during which it is to be enforced is to be taken into consideration. It appears to me, that it may be for the just interest of the party imposing the restraint, to have a certain time after the discharge of his servant, during which he may go round among his customers, & give them warning that that servant is no longer employed in his behalf (TINDAL, C.J.).—PROCTOR v. 183. — — — — —] All contracts in restraint of trade, whereby a party is restricted generally, & without reference to place, from exercising his trade for a specified time, are void by the general policy of the law.

A., a coal merchant, on taking B. into his service as a clerk & traveller, entered into a bond, wherein B. bound himself not to follow or be employed directly or indirectly in the trade of a coal merchant for nine months after he shall have been discharged from his service. An action being brought thereon by A. & a verdict recovered, the judgment was arrested, on the ground that such a contract was void as being in restraint of trade, unreasonable & unnecessary to the protection of pltf.

Wherever a party enters into a contract for which he receives a good consideration, & the contract does not bind him to go farther than to do justice to another, a limited restraint of trade may be supported. If there be nothing in the contract to repeal the idea that no consideration existed, every restraint of the kind would be void as being nudum pactum, in the same way as, if a party were to enter into the service of another without any consideration, it would be void. So, if the stipulations were that he would never trade at all, it would be bad. Then, if he receive a consideration, the object of which is to compensate him for the injury he may do to another if he were to enter the trade without restriction, & to secure that other from any disadvantage resulting therefrom, the restraint would be good, provided it be limited by the proper

186. Validity of promissory note founded on agreement.—Agreement void for want of consideration.—By an agreement, reciting that A. & C. had for some time past employed, & then did employ E. in executing the orders which they from time to time received; & also reciting that A. & C. had requested E. to enter into an agreement to work in his trade or business, to execute the orders of A. & C. in manufacturing & making goods in the way of his trade for the said A. & C. alone, to which he had consented, in consideration of his past employment, & also, of the undertaking of A. & C. to continue to employ him as theretofore. A. & C. agreed with E., that they would, during the joint lives of themselves & E., continue to employ him in executing their order as theretofore, & upon the like or other usual terms, subject nevertheless, to the provisos & agreements thereafter mentioned; & E. agreed with A. & C. that he would, during the joint lives of A. & C. work for & execute their orders for them as he had been accustomed in his trade or business in a good & workmanlike manner, & at general & proper prices & terms; & that he would not at any time work for, or execute or cause to be executed, the orders for any person or persons whomsoever, in his trade or business, without the consent in writing of A. & C., which consent should be necessary on every distinct occasion, & should contain the address of the person or persons for whom he might thereby be permitted to be employed, & also the specific work which he was thereby permitted to perform; but it was provided & agreed, that in case A. & C. should at any time be desirous to put an end to that agreement, & should give, or cause to be given, at least three months' notice in writing to E., the agreement should be considered as at an end & determined, provided also that in case A. & C. should at any time have occasion or be under the necessity, by reason of the urgency or extent of orders, or should otherwise think fit, they should be at liberty to employ any other person or persons to execute orders for them in the trade or business of E.; & that, without thereby releasing E. from his agreement therein contained of exclusively working for A. & C.; & it was provided that nothing therein contained should be taken to restrain or prevent E. from executing the orders of any person or persons residing in the city of London, or within six miles thereof: Held: (1) this agreement, being a partial restraint of trade, & not having an adequate consideration to support it, was void; (2) a promissory note given by E. to A. & C. in consideration of breaches of the agreement, in working for other persons, was also void, & could not be set off by A. & C. in an action against them, at the suit of the assignees of E. for work done.—YOUNG v. TIMMINS (1831), 1 Cr. & J. 331; 1 Tyr. 226; 9 L. J. O. S. Ex. 68; 148 E. R. 1446.

189. Must be sufficient in law to support a contract.—By a written agreement, plff. & deft. agreed to become partners in the business of stage coach proprietors, for the purpose of running a coach daily, at certain hours, between London & Croydon. The agreement contained the following article, 12th, that in the event of dissolution of partnership, & so long as plff. should continue to carry on the trade of a coach proprietor at Croydon, deft. should not, either on his own account or that of any other person or persons, or jointly with any other, run or use for hire any stage coach, omnibus, or other carriage, or otherwise ply for hire on any part of the road over which the coach was appointed to run, at any time within one hour before or after certain specified hours of the day:—Held: the agreement of plff. to enter into the partnership was of itself a sufficient consideration for the partial restraint of trade imposed on deft. by the 12th article.

The agreement is good if there be a sufficient consideration in law to support a contract; & the entering into a partnership, from which the party desires a benefit, is of itself a sufficient consideration to support any promise of this nature. . . . The partnership must last at least a month; & it is clear . . . that the ct. cannot inquire into the extent or adequacy of the consideration (PARKE, B.)—*LEIGHTON v. have the option of dismissing him from their service on giving him a month's notice or a month's wages:—Held: this agreement bound plffs. to employ L. during the seven years, subject to the above power of dismissal; there was, therefore, a good consideration for L.'s contract to serve for the seven years, & the agreement was not in unlawful restraint of trade.

The agreement is a very reasonable one; for it is to give her the benefit of the trade, whenever she will pay what should be given even with her as an apprentice (per C.B.).—(TRESMAN v. NAINBY (1727), 2 Stra. 739; 2 Ld. Raym. 1456; 93 E. R. 819; affd., 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 234, H. L.).

In consideration of A. employing B. at a weekly salary of 21s. to go about London & sell oil for him, B. agreed that he would not for twelve calendar months after the determination of the agreement, which was determinable on a week's notice on either side, sell oil within a radius of eight miles from the General Post Office. After a year's employment B. determined the agreement, & then commenced selling oil on his own account within the prohibited area:—Held: the agreement not being a "hard bargain," & being for valuable consideration, A. was entitled to an injunction.

(2) As regards the order to commit, deft. now says he will obey the injunction. I am always reluctant to send people to prison, if it can possibly be avoided, & as he says that, & as plff. does not press for an immediate order of committal, the course we propose to take is to let the motion to commit stand over generally with liberty to apply (JESSEL, M.R.). The agreement was terminable at a week's notice on either side. Deft. left plffs.' service a few days after he came of age:—Held: the agreement as a whole, was an agreement for the benefit of deft., & an injunction granted to restrain a breach of it.

Such a contract is very beneficial. The reason is that if he is able to make such a bargain, he obtains the means of earning or continuing to earn his livelihood, he gets the employment which he would not otherwise obtain or continue to have without having subject to the restriction (NORTH, J.).—EVANS v. the service of a new restaurant about to be opened in the vicinity, during the current year, & in case of breach to pay £1 a day for every day he might remain in the service of the new restaurant as liquidated damages:—Held: the receiver & manager had authority to enter into the agreement, & it was a reasonable agreement necessary for the protection of the business.

EDGE (1863), 33 Beav. 227; 3 New Rep. 283; 33 L. J. Ch. 413; 10 L. T. 120; 10 Jur. N. S. 871; 12 W. R. 518; 55 E. R. 351.

BUXTON & HIGH PEAK PUBLISHING & GENERAL PRINTING CO. v. MITCHELL (1885), 1 Cab. & El. 527.

224. Contract for articulated clerkship - Covenant by brother-in-law of articulated clerk.—Deft., who practised at R., had for some time acted as solr. to pltf., & it was arranged that he should take pltf.'s brother-in-law G., who was under twenty-one years of age, as his articulated clerk. The usual articles were accordingly prepared, to which pltf. was a party, whereby G., with the consent of his guardian, bound himself clerk to deft. for five years. There was no covenant in any way restricting G. from practising as a solr. at the expiration of the articles.

Simultaneously a bond was executed by pltf. binding himself to pay £1,000 to deft. in case G. should within ten years of the expiration of the articles carry on his profession as a solr. in R., or within ten miles thereof, without the written consent of deft. Shortly after the expiration of the articles G. was admitted a solr. Deft. then insisted that G. should not practise in R., or within ten miles thereof, & threatened to enforce the bond in case G. should commence to practise within that radius. Pltf. thereupon brought an action against deft. claiming a declaration that the bond was obtained by misrepresentation & undue influence & without consideration, & was void, & that he was entitled to have the same set aside; also an injunction to restrain deft. from taking any proceedings to enforce the bond. Alternatively he claimed a declaration that the restriction imposed by the bond was not necessary for the protection of deft., & that the same was void; & he asked that it should be delivered up to be cancelled:—Held: there had been no undue influence or misrepresentation, but pltf. was perfectly well aware what the object of the bond was when he executed it; he had secured in full by the bond the advantage which he sought, viz., the articulated clerkship for his brother-in-law, & therefore had had the consideration for which he executed the bond; & further that, inasmuch as pltf. had delayed for over five years in taking proceedings to dispute his liability under the bond, or to get it set aside, he could not now come to a ct. of equity & obtain such relief.—RICHARDS v. WHITHAM (1892), 68 L. T. 695, C. A.

Consideration for contracts of service.—See, generally, MASTER & SERVANT, Vol. XXXIV., pp. 48, 49.

(c) Proof of Consideration.

225. Consideration not presumed.—In an action of debt on a bond to H., not to enter into the service of another person, within 10 miles of S., during two years after leaving H.'s service, some good consideration ought to be shown on the face of the declaration, as the ct. will not presume one.—HUTTON v. PARKER (1839), 7 Dowl. 739.

226. Consideration may be inferred.—A legal consideration of any value is sufficient to support a contract in partial restraint of trade; & the ct. will not inquire as to its adequacy.

Pltf., a surgeon, engaged deft., who was not qualified to practise, but was studying with a view to pass the necessary examination, to assist him in his practice, the engagement being terminable at the will of either party. Subsequently deft., previously to going up to pass his examination, executed, at the request of pltf., a bond, which was conditioned to be void if deft. should not practise within certain limits, but which contained no express agreement on the part of pltf. to continue deft.'s employment. Deft. remained in pltf.'s employment for about three months afterwards, & was then dismissed. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, & a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held: an agreement by pltf. to continue deft.'s employment on the old terms could be inferred; there was consideration to support the bond, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction.—GRAVELY v. BARNARD (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 518; 43 L. J. Ch. 659; 30 L. T. 863; 39 J. P. 20; 22 W. R. 891.

What amounts to uncertainty—Tied house covenant.—Pltf., a brewer, sold a piece of land to the trustees of a freehold land society, who covenanted with him that he, his heirs & assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying beer to any public-house erected on the land, but pltf. did not enter into any covenant to supply it. Deft., a member of the society, who was also a brewer, acquired a portion of the land with notice of the covenant, & erected on it a public-house which he supplied with his own beer. Pltf. filed his bill to restrain deft. from supplying beer, alleging that pltf. had always been ready to furnish a sufficient supply of good beer at a fair price:—Held: the covenant was not void either for uncertainty or want of mutuality, or as being an unreasonable restraint of trade. B. & his co-pltf., C., carried on in partnership the business of auctioneers & estate agents at Portsmouth & Gosport, & in May, 1920, deft. entered their employment as an outside canvassing & negotiating clerk under a written agreement of service with provided (inter alia) that either party could terminate the employment on giving seven days' notice in writing & clause 5, "after the termination from any cause of the employment aforesaid the clerk shall not for the term of one year carry on or be interested in carrying on the business of auctioneers & estate agents after such termination directly or indirectly assist as clerk manager or in any other capacity in the carrying on of such business within the borough of Portsmouth or in the town of Gosport." The duties of deft. were to interview people & to obtain for pltf.s. intending buyers or sellers, or intending lessors or lessees, of house property. In Sept. 1920, pltf.s. duly terminated deft.'s employment, & on leaving their service he at once commenced business on his own account as an estate agent within the prohibited area, describing himself as "C. Lovegrove, A.A.I., Estate Agent," the initials A.A.I. meaning Associate of the Auctioneers' Institute, but he did not take out an auctioneer's licence nor do any business as an auctioneer: Held: (1) clause 5 on its true construction was not void for uncertainty, the intention of the parties being that deft. should not after the termination of his employment carry on or be interested in carrying on the business of an auctioneer & estate agent within the prohibited area for one year; but (2) deft., in carrying on the business of an estate agent only, had not committed a breach of the clause, nor had he by the use of the initials A.A.I. held himself out to be an auctioneer; (3) the clause being intended to prevent competition per se, was wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of pltf.s.' business & was therefore against public policy & not enforceable.—*BOWLER v. 239. To decide reasonableness of restraint.]—MALLAN v. MAY, No. 258, post.

240. —].—A declaration in covenant recited that pltf. & deft. had been partners as publishers of books, & that part of their trade, called the canvassing trade, consisted in publishing books in numbers, & employing travellers to sell such books by canvassing for purchasers. By indenture, dissolving the partnership, it was agreed that pltf. should retain the whole of the partnership stock, & should indemnify deft. against all liabilities, & pay him a large sum of money. Dft. (inter alia) covenanted not directly nor indirectly to be concerned in the canvassing trade in London or within 150 miles of the General Post Office, nor in Dublin or Edinburgh or within 50 miles of either, nor in any town in Great Britain or Ireland in which pltf. or his successors might at the time have an establishment, or might have had one within the six months preceding. Breaches: that deft. was engaged in the trade within 150 miles of the General Post Office, & also in Manchester & Liverpool, in which towns pltf., at the time of the breaches, had establishments. Pleas, to both sets of breaches: that there were numerous works which pltf. did not publish, & had no intention of publishing, & that many such might be published with advantage to the public, by deft., & without injury to pltf.; that the canvassing trade applied to all such books; & that the restraint, as to the canvassing trade as applicable to such works, was unreasonable: verification. Demurrer, amongst other grounds, because the plea referred matter of law to the jury:—Held: (1) the declaration was good, it not appearing that the restraint was unreasonable, the pleas were bad in substance, as the facts disclosed did not show that the restraint was unreasonable. Qu.: whether, if the facts had so shown, the pleas would have been bad in form.

(2) The authorities treat . . . the reasonableness of the restraint . . . as questions of law for the ct. (ERLE, J.).

(3) If there was a legal consideration of value the contract ought to be enforced without reference to the quantum of that value (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).

(4) The contract is valid unless some restriction is imposed beyond what the interest of pltf. requires, & his interest has been considered to extend very widely (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).

(5) In respect of time the restriction may be unlimited . . . & though in respect of space there must be some limit, yet contracts have been supported where the area of exclusion was apparently greater than the area of pltf.'s practice (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—*TALLIS v. "within the limit of the Eastern Hemisphere":—Held: the agreement, whether regarded as applying to the United Kingdom only or as extending throughout the whole world, was not so wide as to go beyond what was reasonably necessary for the protection of pltf's. in their business, having regard to the peculiar nature of that business, & to the position occupied by deft. therein.

I have to examine into the facts of the case as they existed at the date when this contract was made, & to judge from those facts whether or not this contract is so wide that it cannot be said to be reasonably necessary for the protection of pltf. co. in their business.

The judge must say . . . whether or not the restrictive contract was reasonably necessary for the protection of the contractee. As to the facts, if there is a judge & jury, the judge will have to get those facts found by the jury, & then, when those facts have been ascertained, he will have to look at the contract & to take into consideration the circumstances under which it was entered into as found by the jury, & then say whether it is reasonable (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.):— LAMSON PNEUMATIC TUBE CO. v. B. Function of Jury.

247. To find issues of fact.—(1) A limited co. carrying on business as cider merchants, aerated-water manufacturers, & cordial compounders, & having about 1,200 customers chiefly in the south of England, with a small number over the rest of England, Scotland, Ireland, & abroad, employed a manager for the cider department, who, by agreement under seal, covenanted with the co. that he would not, either solely or jointly with or as manager or agent for any other person or persons directly or indirectly carry on or be engaged or concerned in the business of a cider merchant, manufacturing chemist, or cordial compounder for the term of five years after leaving the service of the co.:—Held: upon its true construction the covenant extended to every part of the world, & it was wider than was necessary for the protection of the business of the company, & therefore unreasonable, & void as being in restraint of trade.

On the construction of the covenant in this case I cannot doubt that it imposes a world-wide restraint. I can see no ground for limiting its operation to the United Kingdom. I think it must stand or fall as being a covenant prohibiting deft. from carrying on the businesses in question in any part of the world. The question whether such a covenant is valid depends upon the question whether it could really be necessary for the protection of the particular business carried on by pltf's. There may be some businesses of such a character that a covenant of this kind might not be unreasonable with regard to them; but the question is whether it can be said to be reasonable with regard to pltf's. business (COZENS-HARDY, L.J.).

(2) With reference to the question whether it is within the province of the judge, or that of the jury, to decide as to the reasonableness of the covenant, we start with the clear rule of law that, in general, a contract in restraint of trade is illegal; & therefore, in the case of an action upon such a contract, it would be the duty of the judge, upon ascertaining the nature of the contract, to withdraw the question from the jury. Upon the general rule there is engrafted a qualification depending upon the character of the restriction in relation to the circumstances of the particular case. Such a contract may be valid, if, having regard to those circumstances, it is reasonable. The question is, within whose province it falls to say whether the restriction in a particular case comes within the general rule or the qualification of that rule. Clearly, I should say, within the province of the tribunal whose duty it would be, in the absence of any special circumstances, upon the construction of the contract to declare it to be illegal. The authorities support that view (MATHEW, L.J.).

(3) The critical period at which to look is the time when the covenant was entered into (COZENS-HARDY, L.J.).

(4) In deciding the question [of reasonableness] all the surrounding circumstances ought to be taken into consideration & are admissible in evidence.

In pursuance of that agreement plff. abstained from bidding & the goods were knocked down to deft. Dft. subsequently repudiated the agreement. In an action by plff. to recover one moiety of the goods purchased or the value thereof over & above the price paid at the auction, the judge held that, at any rate where the goods sold were the property of the public, it was against public policy that persons should combine at an auction to procure the goods to be sold at a price considerably below the fair value with the necessary result that the public were defrauded. 267. — Agreement restricting customer to one manufacturer.—A letter written by manufacturers to a trade customer, offering their goods at a low price if the customer agrees to take such goods exclusively from them, is an "original literary work" within Copyright Act, 1911 (c. 46), s. 1 (1), & the writers are entitled to copyright therein. (b) Limits of Time or Space.

269. General rule—Limits of time & space must be considered.—Pltffs., a foreign corpn., carried on business as manufacturers of aniline dyes & other chemical products, their principal place of business being on the Rhine, but they traded with most parts of the world, partly by means of branch establishments, partly by agents, & partly direct. Defts., who had their place of business at Manchester, had been pltffs.' agents in England under an agreement, by clause 7 of which they bound themselves for three consecutive years after the termination of the agreement not to start a business of the same kind nor to give any information about the business. The agreement was terminated on June 30, 1892, & defts. then commenced business on their own account in Manchester as dealers in chemical colours, & solicited the custom of pltffs.' customers. On a motion for an injunction to restrain defts. from carrying on business in breach of clause 7 of the agreement :—Held : the clause was not unreasonable for the protection of pltffs.' trade, & interim injunction granted.

(1) Where a covenant in restraint of trade is general, that is, without qualification, it is bad as being unreasonable & contrary to public policy; but where it is partial, that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or space, then the question is whether it is reasonable, & if it is reasonable, then it is good in law. In considering the question of reasonableness, the points to which the attention of the ct. is specially directed are the limits of time & space, & the protection required for the trade of the covenantee, the latter point involving the examination of the nature & extent of the trade. The reasonableness depends on all the circumstances, which must be duly weighed in each case, & if the restraint is greater than the protection that the business of the covenantee can possibly require, the covenant is unreasonable & void.

(2) When the covenant is qualified as to time, the burden lies on the covenantor of showing that the restraint is unreasonable.

(3) Although not conclusive on the subject, the opinion of mercantile men, manifested by their Act, 1893, the shares being transferable only with the consent of the committee of the society, bound the members not to sell the milk of their cows, produced within a certain defined area, "to any creamery other than a creamery of the society, or to any co.

After the termination of deft.'s employment under the agreement deft. in 1919 intentionally committed a breach of the restrictive covenant in order to test the validity of the restriction:—Held: the covenant, though unlimited in point of time, did not in the circumstances exceed what was reasonably required for the protection of the covenantee & was not against the public interest.—FITCH v. corp., of any Burton ale or porter brewed at Burton, or offered for sale as such, other than the ale, beer, or porter brewed by pltf.s:—Held: (1) void as unnecessarily extensive.

There has been a natural inclination of the cts. to bring within reasonable limits the doctrine as to these covenants laid down in the earlier cases, but it has generally been considered in the later as well as in the earlier cases that a covenant not to carry on a lawful trade, unlimited as to space, is on the face of it void (WICKENS, V.-C.).

297. ——A covenant, negative in its terms, prohibiting a servant during the term of his employment from being concerned in any business other than that of his employer, is not enforceable by way of injunction, at any rate where the prohibition is not restricted to a competing business.

A traveller for pltf.s, a firm of wine merchants, agreed to denote the whole of his attention & time to the business of pltf.s, & not directly or indirectly to engage or employ himself in any other business, or transact any business with any person or persons than pltf. for a term of ten years. The traveller having left pltf.s' employ & entered that of another firm, pltf.s moved for an injunction to restrain him from engaging in any other business, & from acting as a traveller for any other firm of wine merchants during the term of ten years:—Held: the negative stipulations in this contract were unreasonable & ought not to be enforced, & the application must therefore be refused.

(2) To enforce such a general negative stipulation as I find here would be in my opinion a dangerous extension, for here the stipulation extends to business of any kind, while the negative stipulations enforced in the prior cases . . . were confined to special services. For these reasons I refuse the motion, but looking at the conduct of deft., I do so without costs (ROMER, J.). *EHRLMAN v. 306. —. —. —. Plff. was a director of a co. which was engaged in selling land in Canada. Defts. were the proprietors of a weekly newspaper in which they held themselves out as giving honest advice to intending purchasers of Canadian land. Plff. agreed with defts., who owed him £1,490, that if they paid him £750 by certain instalments & observed the terms of the agreement in all respect he would accept £750 in full satisfaction of their debt, but that on breach of any of the terms the whole £1,490, less any sums paid on account, should immediately become due & payable. One of the terms was that defts. should not publish in any periodical published by them any comment upon plff.'s land co., its directors, business or land, or upon any co. with which defts. had notice that the land co. was connected or concerned. Upon a subsequent breach of this term by defts., plff. brought this action under the agreement to recover the balance of the whole £1,490:—Held: the agreement was unenforceable, being vitiated by the term in question upon two grounds, namely (a) that the term was in restraint of trade & was wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of plff., & (b) the term was void as being against public policy, inasmuch as it was not consistent with the proper conduct of the newspaper in the public interest.—*NEVILLE v. 309. —. —. —. A co-operative society, registered under the Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893 (c. 39), carried on the business of manufacturing for sale cheese & butter from milk supplied by certain of its members. By its amended rules the society bound itself to take all milk produced by members' cows kept on any lands within a defined area, comprising some eighty townships, at the current price fixed by the committee, & rule 6 (2) provided that no member having milk to sell, the produce of cows kept within the defined area, should, without the previous consent of the committee, sell any such milk to any creamery other than the creamery of the society, or to any co., society or person who sold milk or manufactured butter for sale. Under rule 16 a member whose shares had been transferred or cancelled thereupon ceased to be a member, but a member was not otherwise entitled to withdraw from the society. Rule 21 required the consent of the committee to any transfer of shares, but the committee were not bound to assign any reason for their refusal. The rules contained an arbn. clause providing for the reference of all disputes between the society & its members to the Irish Agricultural Organisation Society, whose award was to be final. In an action by a member impeaching the validity of the rules:—Held: rule 6 (2) read in combination with rules 16 & 21, imposed upon members a greater restraint than was reasonably required for the protection of the society, & was illegal as in restraint of trade & ultra vires the society.—McELLISTRIM v. BALLYMACCELLIGOTT CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL & DAIRY SOCIETY, [1919] A. C. 518; 88 L. J. P. C. 59; 120 L. T. 613; 35 T. L. R. 351, H. L.

310. —. —. —. Plffs. carried on a large business, extending over the whole of the United Kingdom, in the manufacture & sale of B. R. C. road reinforcements. In 1918 deft. S. & his partners, who carried on a small business for the sale, not manufacture, of loop road reinforcements over a limited area of the United Kingdom, sold their business to plffs., & jointly & severally covenanted for a certain period neither directly nor indirectly to carry on or manage or be concerned or interested in "or act as servant of any person concerned or interested in" the business of the "manufacture or" sale of road reinforcements in any part of the United Kingdom. Deft. S. having recently entered the employment of a road reinforcement co., plffs. sued on the covenant:—Held: the servant clause was too wide in scope; e.g., it would have prevented S. from becoming the servant of any trust co. that held shares in any road reinforcement co.; the servant clause being part of the main purport & substance of the one entire covenant could not be severed, though the words "manufacture or" being merely subject-matter might be severed; assuming severance was allowed, & assuming that S. had broken the rest of the covenant, which on its construction was extremely doubtful, & as to which no breach was assigned in the pleadings, the covenant was still too wide in area for the protection of the goodwill of the small business sold. In considering the reasonableness of a covenant in restraint of trade entered into by a vendor on the sale of a business, the ct. must merely consider whether it was reasonably necessary for the protection of the purchaser in respect of the particular business sold. The purchaser's existing businesses are not the legitimate subject of this protection, & their nature & extent must be disregarded.—BRITISH REIN-

323. —.]—A covenant, by a licensee for the residue of a term of fourteen years, of patent improvements in machinery for slubbing fibrous substances, not to make or vend any slubbing frames whatever without the invention applied to them, is not void as a covenant in restraint of trade. To an action for breach of such covenant, deft. pleaded that he was at all times ready & willing, & offered to use, exercise, & put the invention in practice, both in the making & vending slubbing frames with the invention attached, & used his best endeavours to induce manufacturers & others to employ him to make & to purchase & apply the same from him; nevertheless, the invention & frames to which the invention was applied, was & were of so little value & utility, & were so defective & worthless, that without deft.'s default he was at all times during the continuance of the licence unable to induce any person so to employ him, & was by reason thereof prevented from using, exercising or putting in practice the licence, & the invention & licence became & were useless to deft., & the licence was of no use, benefit or effect, wherefore deft. made & vended slubbing frames without the invention applied to them:—Held: the plea was no answer to the action.

It would be a very mischievous decision if we were to hold that a contract, which it may be presumed was reasonable at the time it was entered into, might be construed as a contract in restraint of trade because something more useful than the subject matter of it has been invented, or the habits of society have changed (POLLOCK, C.B.).—JONES v. After leaving plffs.' employment deft., who had obtained particulars of a secret machine of plffs.' & formulae & of materials used by them, became manager to a co. which manufactured goods similar to those of plffs.:—Held: on a motion for an interlocutory injunction in an action to enforce the agreement, deft. had made an improper use of plffs.' secret formulae or processes of manufacture within the first branch of the agreement which did not extend to processes in common use & to which considerations of time & space did not apply, & his breach of that part of the covenant ought to be restrained. The covenant restraining deft. from engaging for five years in any business which plffs. might carry on would be too wide, but was severable from the rest of the second part of the agreement. The covenant in that part being qualified both as to time & space, the onus of proving that it was unreasonable lay upon deft., & the evidence showing that the covenant was necessary for the proper protection of trade, this part of the covenant was held not to be unreasonable, & an interlocutory injunction granted in the terms of the covenant down to the words "carbon papers & ribbons."—*CARBONUM CO., LTD. v. Plff. brought this action, alleging that deft. was infringing those covenants & seeking to restrain him. Deft. delivered a statement of defence, whereby he specifically denied that he was infringing the covenants, & further demurred on the ground that the covenant not to carry on such business was in restraint of trade, & too general in its provisions:—Held: having regard to the subject-matter the covenant was not too general, & the demurrer must be overruled.—*HAGG v. SECT. 3.—PARTIES TO AGREEMENT.

SUB-SECT. 1. IN GENERAL.

387. Agent acting under power of attorney—Right to bind principal.—By a power of attorney, B., who was one of the four partners in a firm of dyers carrying on business at D. under the style of B. O. & Co., appointed his brother E. his attorney, to sell or concur in selling any of his real, leasehold, or personal property to any person or persons, "upon such terms, subject to such special or other conditions, & in such manner" as the attorney should approve, & also to sign any deeds that ought to be executed " & generally to do, negotiate, transact, & perfect all & any other act, deed, matter or thing whatsoever . . . for the transacting, settling, & adjusting all other my estate, affairs, tradings, & concerns whatsoever"; & with full power & authority to act as fully & effectually as if he were personally present & did the same himself. E., acting for himself as a partner, & also under his power of attorney on behalf of B., joined with the other partners of the firm in executing a contract for the sale of the business to H.

Amongst other things, it was agreed that H. should pay the debts of the business, which were estimated at £15,000; if they did not exceed that amount the vendors were to be entitled to a share of profits calculated on £5,000 "deferred capital"; if the debts exceeded £15,000, £5 for every £2 of the excess was to be deducted from the £5,000 deferred capital; the vendors might require H. to take over their deferred capital, paying in cash two-fifths of its nominal amount; if the concern was converted into a limited co., the vendors were to receive shares for their deferred capital; & if the debts were less than £15,000, H. was to pay the difference in cash at the end of two years. It was agreed that H. might carry on the business under the style of B. O. & co., & that the vendors should not carry on any like business within fifty miles of D. H. brought an action for specific performance:—

Held: (1) the provisions as to deferred capital were only a way of ascertaining the purchase-money, & did not constitute a partnership; & therefore the agreement was not void against B., on the ground that the power of attorney did not authorise an agreement for a partnership; (2) if the power of attorney did not authorise E. to give the purchaser power to trade under the name of B. O. & co., nor to agree not to trade within fifty miles of D., they were stipulations for the benefit of H., which he could waive, & he having done so, that a decree for specific performance ought to be made.

(3) Seemle: E., was authorised by the power of attorney to enter into the agreement not to carry on business of a similar character, within fifty miles of D., as a going concern could not be sold advantageously without such a provision. 395. — Purchaser of part of business—Covenant with employer, assignees & successors.]—(1) The servant of a milkman, in C. street, London, agreed not to carry on the like business within three miles therefrom:—Held: this was not an undue restraint of trade, & the servant was restrained, by injunction, from violating his agreement.

(2) A. agreed to take B. as his servant, "at such wages as might from time to time be agreed on," & B., on his part, agreed to serve A., & not to set up trade for himself within certain limits. B. accordingly entered into & continued in A.'s service, at wages agreed on:—Held: there was a good & valuable consideration to support the agreement as against B., & the c. enforced it.

(3) A milkman, carrying on business in three places, took deft. into his service. Deft. engaged, as regarded the milkman, his assignees & successors, not to carry on a similar trade within certain limits. A. sold his branch business at one of the three places to pltf., who retained deft. in his service:—Held: pltf. as assignee & successor of part of the business, was entitled to the benefit of deft.'s contract. —*BENWELL v. 397. ——Defts. assigned to pltf. a business they carried on in partnership on certain premises. In the deed of assignment they covenanted not to carry on the business within a certain area, nor to do any act, matter, or thing, whereby or by reason whereof pltf., his exors., administrators, or assigns, or any other person or persons, claiming or to claim under him or them, should or might be injured or damaged in the trade or business. Subsequently pltf. assigned to A. & B. "the business in its entirety & the goodwill thereof as carried on by pltf. upon the aforesaid premises." & engaged that he would not, after the transfer of the said business, carry on a similar business within a certain area. There was not, however, any express assignment of the benefit of defts.' covenant to A. & B., but the memorandum containing the terms of the assignment stipulated that all proper dues & documents should be prepared & signed by the necessary parties. After the assignment to A. & B. defts. committed a breach of their covenant with pltf. by carrying on business within the specified area: Held: pltf. was entitled to recover substantial, & not merely nominal damages, as a trustee for A. & B., his assignees. —WRIGHT v. CHAPPELL (1869), 20 L. T. 369; 17 W. R. 655.

398. ——An agreement by a person employed by another not to carry on a similar business at any time thereafter within a certain area is, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, construed to continue during the whole of the contractor's lifetime, notwithstanding the employer has (a) removed his business to another place; or (b) assigned it to a third person; or (c) retired from the business without assigning it. The benefit of such an agreement, since it adds value to the goodwill of the business, passes on an assignment either of the "goodwill" or of the "beneficial interest" in the business; & the agreement may be enforced by the assign, although assigns are not expressly mentioned in the agreement.

On being employed as a shopman to C., an Italian warehouseman, W. entered into a written agreement with C., in which the assigns were not mentioned, not to carry on a similar business within a mile of C.'s shop. C. afterwards removed his business to other premises 450 yards away, taking W. with him as shopman. W. afterwards left his employment & C. sold the beneficial interest & goodwill in his business to J. W. having set up a similar business at premises not a mile distant from either of C.'s premises:—Held: in an action by J. against W. the benefit of W.'s covenant with C. passed by the assignment to J., & J. was entitled to an injunction restraining W. from carrying on business within the one mile limit.

No evidence as to the intention of the parties can be admitted (BRETT, M.R.).—JACOBY v. WHITMORE (1883), 49 L. T. 335; 48 J. P. 325; 32 W. R. 18, C. A.

Pltfs. in Mar. 1887, assigned their business of brewers, with the goodwill, to a co., agreeing verbally with the co. that they should employ pltfs.' travellers. Deft. entered the co.'s service, & left them in Sept. 1887, & became employed in a similar business. Pltfs. brought an action against deft. for injunction: Held: (1) the benefit of the restrictive agreement passed to the co. with the goodwill, & pltfs. were merely trustees thereof for the co.; (2) pltfs.' consent to deft.'s entering the service of the co., independently of its not having been in writing, was not a release of the restrictive agreement for the future. *SHOWELL v. The agreement further provided that the vendors would not during the three years, if they continued to be managing directors either solely or jointly, carry on or engage directly or indirectly in any other trade or business, or if they, or either of them, for any reason ceased to be managing directors or director, they or he would not, during the period of ten years from the date of their or his so ceasing, carry on or assist or take part, directly or indirectly, in the same or a similar business in the City of London or within 20 miles thereof. A receiver, who was appointed on behalf of the debenture holders in the co., sold the business to pltf., & informed deft. that his services as managing director would no longer be required:—Held: the covenant was not too wide; the covenant was not put an end to by the receiver informing deft. that his services would no longer be required; & the covenant passed to the assignee upon the assignment of the goodwill of the business. — *WELSTEAD v. 404. — — — — —.]—A partnership agreement was entered into by A., B., & C. on Dec. 1, 1905. By an agreement made between A., B., & C. of the one part & S. of the other part, made on Dec. 2, 1905, S. agreed to serve as general manager for ten years from Jan. 1, 1906, if the partnership should so long exist, & if that engagement should during such term be terminated in consequence of any breach on the part of S. of any of the terms of engagement towards the firm, S. bound himself not at any time within ten years thereafter & within a radius of 20 miles from Nelson's Column to carry on or be engaged in any business similar to or including the business for which the firm was about to be constituted. S. was dismissed on Oct. 3, 1907, for breach of the terms of engagement. The goodwill of the business was assigned to pltf. co. on Nov. 12, 1907. Pltf. co. asked for an injunction restraining S. from carrying on business within 20 miles of Nelson's Column. S. alleged that he was not carrying on a similar business as he did not manufacture, but merely bought from manufacturers. He also said the covenant was a personal one & could not be assigned. On S.'s note-paper he described himself as "Automobile carriage builder. High class work at moderate price," & he also advertised:—Held: (1) S. was carrying on a business similar to & directly competing with plaintiff co.; (2) the object of the agreement was to protect the goodwill of the business, & the benefit passed to the assignee of the goodwill.—AUTOMOBILE CARRIAGE BUILDERS, LTD. v. SAYERS (1909), 101 L. T. 419.

405. — — — — —.]—In 1906 deft. entered into an agreement in writing with a partnership firm consisting of two members who were carrying on the business of importing & selling wood & slate, that he should be employed by them as clerk, traveller, & representative for the sale of their commodities. By clause 8 of the agreement it was provided that deft. should not at any time during the period of five years after he should cease to be in the service of the firm be "engaged or concerned, either alone or with or on behalf of any other person or persons, in any business whatsoever connected with the wood & slate business" in the four specified adjoining counties without the consent in writing of the firm. After the death of both of the partners deft. entered the employment of another firm of timber merchants, who eventually established a branch of their business at a town which was in one of the counties referred to in the agreement, & they appointed deft. as manager of it. Pltfs., the exors. of the last surviving partner, complained that deft. had been soliciting orders from their customers in breach of the agreement, & they brought an action against him claiming an injunction to restrain further breaches & damages:—Held: the restrictive agreement was one the benefit of which was capable of being assigned & was assigned with the goodwill of the business, but the restriction imposed by the agreement went further than was necessary for the reasonable protection of the employers, & would not be enforced by the cts., the words "connected with" being an exceedingly vague & general expression, & what it meant to include was something which was not the wood business itself.—WHITMORE v. KING (1918), 87 L. J. Ch. 617; 119 L. T. 533, C. A.

[of galvanised iron manufacturers] had been carried on at Wolverhampton & in London. In an action by the survivor of the continuing partners & his assignees to restrain the retiring partner from carrying on a similar business in Middlesex :—Held : the covenant to retire from the business so far as the law allows was too vague for the ct. to enforce.

(2) If there is valuable consideration then the ct. will not consider, but will leave the parties to consider whether that consideration is or is not sufficient (COTTON, L.J.).

(3) A limit in time is not indispensable in order to enable the covenant to be enforced where there is some other limit to be found which makes the contract reasonable & necessary for the protection of the party who seeks to protect himself (BOWEN, L.J.).

(4) The law of England allows a man to contract for his labour or allows him to place himself in the service of a master, but it does not allow him to attach to his contract of service any servile incidents, any elements of servitude as distinguished from service (BOWEN, L.J.).

(5) If a covenant is in any way limited, either sufficiently as regards space, or sufficiently as regards time, then it will not be considered as an absolute restraint of trade, but only a limited restraint (COTTON, L.J.).

(6) It is not necessary in the present case to consider or to decide whether what I have called the old doctrine of the common law, that covenants absolutely unlimited both in space & in time ought to be modified, having regard to the altered character of the commercial intercourse of the world (BOWEN, L.J.).—*DAVIES v. 428. Contract with wholesale dealer not to retail at less than specified price—Wholesale dealer commencing sale direct to public—Right of retail dealer to notice of charge.—Defts., manufacturers, sold goods to plffs., who were retailers, upon condition that plffs. should not resell the goods to the public at less than a specified price. After business had been carried on between plffs. & defts. upon this condition for three years defts., without giving plffs. notice of their intention to change their method of business, began to sell goods direct to the public without the intervention of middlemen, at a price very much lower than that which plffs. were obliged to charge under their contract with defts. As a result of this action by defts. plffs. were left with goods which they had bought from defts. & had in stock, & could not dispose of the goods except at a loss. They now claimed damages on the ground that a term must be implied in the contract of defts. that they would not themselves sell the goods to the public below that which plffs. were bound by the contract to charge, or at least that before beginning to sell goods to the public they would give plffs. sufficient notice to enable them to dispose of their stock of goods at a profit: Held: no such term as plffs. required could be implied in the contract.—*LIVOCK v. B. As to Time.

431. Covenant by employee No limit of time expressed Whether restricted to time of service.—Deft., on being appointed agent for the sale of wine & spirits of plffs. gave to them a bond, with condition that deft. should diligently, honestly, & faithfully serve plffs., as such agent, & should not engage in, undertake, transact, or do any business in the same trade, within ten miles of the town of T., for himself, or any other person or firm, & should use his best endeavours to promote the interest & increase the business & connection of plffs.; & should faithfully & punctually collect, account for & pay over all debts of plffs.:—Held: the restriction, as to deft. doing business for other persons in the same trade within the particular district, was limited to the time he remained in plffs.' service.—KING v. HANSELL (1860), 5 H. & N. 106; 1 L. T. 376; 157 E. R. 1119.

432. — — — — ——Plff. in this action carried on the business of a pathological laboratory. He had commenced the business in 1901. It consisted of making chemical, microscopical, & bacteriological examinations of samples of material sent to him & making reports thereon. It was in 1901 a new method of medical research; there were only two or three similar institutions in London, & plff.'s clients were almost wholly consultant physicians residing in the Harley Street district. In 1905 plff. engaged deft. as assistant microscopist in his laboratory upon terms which made the engagement terminable on a month's notice, & included an agreement that deft. would not engage in any similar work within ten miles of plff.'s laboratory; no limit of time was expressed. The period of notice was afterwards lengthened. Plff. gave deft. six months' notice on July 15, 1912, but by consent the engagement was determined on Oct. 25. Dft. shortly afterwards opened a pathological laboratory at 25, Beaumont Street, within half a mile of plff.'s laboratory. Plff. brought this action to restrain him. The judge held on the construction of the agreement that the restriction was confined to the time during which the engagement continued & dismissed the action:—Held: (1) on the construction the restriction lasted during the whole of deft.'s life; (2) the restriction was wider than was reasonably necessary for plff.'s protection & was therefore void.—EASTES v. RUSSELL, [1914] 1 Ch. 168; 83 L. J. (Ch. 329; 110 L. T. 296; 30 T. L. R. 237; 58 Sol. Jo. 234, C. A.).

C. As to Space.

438. Whether restricted to particular locality.—By an agreement for the employment of deft. by plffs. in their business of dairymen, deft. agreed that he would not, during the continuance of his service, or at any time thereafter, serve or solicit, or in any way interfere with any of the customers who should at any time be served by or then belong to plffs. in the said business:—Held: (1) deft.'s agreement must be construed as referring only to the business of dairymen as then carried on by defts. in a particular locality, & not to any other such business started by them elsewhere; (2) (LORD ESHER, M.R., & LOPES, L.J.) the agreement was severable & was good with regard to customers of plffs. who were such while deft. was in their service.

(3) (RIGBY, L.J., & semble, ESHER, M.R.) The agreement was good both with regard to the above-mentioned customers & with regard to customers who became such after the termination of deft.'s service with plffs.

440. Whether restricted to particular place of business—Change of place of business.—Deft. was engaged as a servant by B., a dairyman, of Evelyn's Dairy, 160, Edward street, New Cross, & deft. agreed with B., his assigns & successors, that after quitting the service he would not "interfere with the trade & the customers served by & from the dairy aforesaid." Plffs. purchased B.'s business, it being part of the agreement that B. should introduce plffs. to his customers. The premises at 160, Edward street being found unsuitable, plffs. moved the business to 95, High street, Deptford, which was about the same distance from B.'s customers' houses as was 160, Edward street. After being in plffs.' service for some time, deft. left them & thereafter served customers of plffs. who had been introduced by B. Plffs. claimed to restrain deft. from committing a breach of his covenant by interfering with plffs.' trade or the customers served by & from plffs.' dairy at 95, High street, Deptford:—Held: the action failed as the covenant by deft. only related to customers served by & from the premises at 160, Edward street, & none of those who had been served by deft. after leaving plffs.' service could be so described.—MARSHALL & MURRAY, LTD. v. JONES (1913), 29 T. L. R. 351.

On motion by A. to restrain B. from setting up as a tailor within the prescribed limit in breach of the agreement:—Held: the agreement was void, & effect could not be given it by rejecting the general restraint, & limiting the agreement for the purposes of the action to carrying on the business of a tailor thereby sought to be restrained.—BAKER v. HEDGECOCK (1888), 39 Ch. D. 520; 57 L. J. Ch. 889; 59 L. T. 361; 36 W. R. 840; 4 T. L. R. 569.

SUB-SECT. 3.—ADMISSIBILITY OF EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

See, generally, DEEDS, Vol. XVII., pp. 302–358.

448. Whether admissible—To identify subject-matter of contract—Nature of employment.—A mercantile house in London, dealing in lace, employed travellers to obtain orders, & sell for them in England, each in a particular district or journey. A vacancy having occurred in the travellership of the M. journey, plffs. acquainted deft. with the fact, he being then in their employ in another occupation, & it was verbally agreed with him that he should fill the place, the understanding being, that a contract in writing should be afterwards drawn up & signed. Deft. started on the M. journey, & sometime afterwards the following form of contract was sent down to him & he signed it:—"In consideration of my entering upon your employ, at a salary of, etc., I herewith agree to do so with the understanding, that in the event of my wishing to travel, & doing so, for any other house in the same trade, on any part of the same ground, to pay you the sum of £50." Deft., after having travelled for plffs. on the M. journey for about a year, quitted their service, & commenced travelling, for a rival house of business, over the M. journey. In an action by plffs. for the penalty:—Held: (1) plffs. were entitled to recover, for a good consideration for deft.'s undertaking appeared on the face of the writing; the circumstances under which deft. became traveller to plffs. showed a good consideration in fact; the contract meant to engage the entire services of deft. so long as he was in plffs.' employ, & it would have been a breach of it to travel for any one else in the absence of the prohibitory part; & therefore, the contract intended the penalty to attach in case deft. travelled, over the same ground, for any other house in the same trade after he left plffs.' employ; (2) the extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to identify the particular service in which deft. was to be employed, viz. that of traveller, & the ground over which he was to travel, viz. the M. journey; the subject-matter of the contract being thus ascertained, the contract was not unlimited in point of space, & so void as in restraint of trade.—MUMFORD v. GETHING (1859), 7 C. B.

SUB-SECT. 5. — PARTICULAR WORDS AND PHRASES.

458. "London"—Whether confined to City of London.]—In construing instruments the words are to be construed according to their strict & primary acceptation, unless from the context of the instrument, & the intention of the parties to be collected from it, they appear to be used in a different sense, or unless in their strict sense they are incapable of being carried into effect; subject, however, to this, that the meaning of a particular word may be shown by parol evidence, to be different in some particular place, trade or business, from its proper and ordinary signification.

By articles of agreement between A., described as "of Great Russell street, Bloomsbury Square, in the county of Middlesex," of the one part, & B., etc., of the second part, the former agreed to instruct the latter in the business of a surgeon dentist for a term of four years, & it was stipulated that B. should not, without the consent of A., carry on the business of a dentist surgeon "in London, or any of the towns or places in England or Scotland," where A. may have been practising before the expiration of the term: Held: in its strict & proper meaning, the word London meant the City of London, in which sense it ought to be understood as there was nothing in the context to prevent its being construed in its proper sense; & that a statement in the case, that "London" had a popular or colloquial sense, in which Great Russell Street would be understood to be within its limits, was not sufficient for the purpose of causing a different construction to be put upon that word in the instrument. *MALAN v. The co. afterwards sold the business to a firm, the purchase-money being payable to the co. by instalments lasting over several years. The firm having begun to carry on both a home & an export business, applts. brought an action against respnt. for breach of covenant:—Held: resp. was not “concerned or interested in” the home business in the business sense which must be attributed to those words, & there was no breach of covenant. *CORY (WILLIAM) & SON, LTD. v. 1891, deft. gave plffs. a month's notice to terminate the engagement, & on leaving plffs. he entered into the service of a rival firm in London, & as plffs. alleged solicited the custom of the customers of plffs. Plffs. had not any trade with Birmingham, but a considerable business with the other places mentioned in the agreement. This was a motion on the part of plffs. asking, in the terms of the covenant, omitting the words "or hereafter" near the end, that deft. might be restrained by injunction from committing a breach of the agreement: Held: the limit of time was reasonable, also that of space, with the exception of Birmingham, with which place plffs. appeared to have no connection; the words "principal, clerk, agent, or otherwise," in the agreement were not too wide; the words "now or hereafter" in the agreement were not reasonable; & the ct. could separate the different parts of the covenant, holding part good and part bad. *DAVIES, TURNER & CO. v. Deft., an infant, entered into an agreement with plff. to act as an assistant in plff.'s retail bakery business, & his duty was to take the bread out & sell it to customers & others on the round. He agreed that he would not within three years after leaving the service & within a distance of ten miles be engaged in the business of miller, baker, & in some other employments which the master did not then carry on. He would not have obtained the employment if he had not accepted this agreement. After several years' service he left the employment & set up a bakery business in the same place: Held: the agreement was operative as to the restriction relating to the retail bakery business but was inoperative with regard to the other restrictions, & as the operative part could be severed, plff. was entitled to an injunction to restrain deft. from being engaged in the bakery business.

The restriction must coincide with what is necessary for the protection of the master's business (CHANNELL, J.).—BROMLEY v. SMITH, [1909] 2 K. B. 235; 78 L. J. K. B. 715; 100 L. T. 731.

Deft. was employed by the plff., a tailor carrying on businesses at three places A. B. & C. in Birmingham, as manager & cutter. Deft. in consideration of the employment promised that on the determination of his agreement he would not for five years (a) set up as a tailor himself, (b) enter into the employment of a named neighbouring trade rival, (c) be employed in any capacity with any tailor carrying on business in A. or B. or C.:—Held: the promise not to take service with any tailor in A. could be severed from the other promises & enforced, in that it did not affect the original effect & meaning of the agreement—namely to protect the plff. against the improper use by deft. of the knowledge which he had acquired in plff.'s service—but only limited the scope of its operation. *PUTSMAN v. 487. Contract not to trade within United Kingdom Or in foreign countries.—UNDERWOOD (E.) & SON, LTD. v. BARKER, No. 777, post.

488. — — — [1] Deft. was employed by plffs. as a traveller in their solid tyre department under an agreement which contained the following clause: "On the termination by any means of this agreement [deft.] shall not for a period of one year from the date of such termination either alone or jointly or in partnership, or in the service of any other person or persons, firm, or co. whatsoever directly or indirectly, either by himself or as agent, or otherwise carry on or manager or be concerned, employed, or interested in the sale, purchase, manufacture or other dealings in india-rubber goods, whether wholesale or retail, in any part of the United Kingdom, Germany, or France." Deft. within one year after leaving plffs.' employment entered the service of another co. which was engaged in the sale of india-rubber goods in the United Kingdom, whereupon plffs. claimed an injunction:—Held: the covenant, considering the duration of the restriction, was not too wide or unreasonable for the protection of plffs.' business, except that part of it which related to Germany & France, in which countries plffs. sold no india-rubber goods, but that that part of the covenant could be severed from the other part; & therefore plffs. were entitled to an injunction on that footing.

The views of the cts. as to restraint of trade have altered from time to time. The cts. in early times approached the subject with a prejudice against restraint of trade; they thought that all restraints of trade were contrary to public policy & therefore void. Later cts. had relaxed that rule & held that, while general restraints were bad, partial restraints might be good. . . . There is considerable force in the argument that a person employed in one particular department of a business would be in a position to pick up a certain amount of information as to the other departments of the business & that therefore it is not unreasonable for his employers to protect themselves as to those other departments. I take the view that deft. has not made it clear that plffs.' interest did not require deft.'s exclusion or that the public interest would be sacrificed if the proposed restraint were upheld. . . . As the decisions stood at present there seems to be no difficulty as to severing a covenant when there were other words in the covenant to which the restriction can apply, but I feel great difficulty when there is only one word in the covenant to which the restriction can apply in saying that the ct. can insert other words in the covenant in order to cut down the meaning of the words used in the covenant (SCRUTTON, J.).

(2) It is not to the public interest that persons should be allowed to lightly break contracts which they had entered into (SCRUTTON, J.). CONTINENTAL TYRE & RUBBER (GREAT BRITAIN) CO., LTD. v. HEATH (1913), 29 T. L. R. 308.

489. — — — [1] A covenant not to carry on or be interested in the business of vendor or dealer in real or imitation jewellery for the period of two years in the County of London, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, or any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain & Ireland & the Isle of Man, or in France, the United States of America, Russia, or Spain, or within twenty five miles of the Potsdamerstrasse, Berlin, or St. Stefan's Kirche, Vienna, is severable both in respect of the nature of the business & the area covered by it.

Where therefore the ct. was of opinion that it was reasonably necessary for the protection of the covenantee's business it granted an injunction against the covenantor's carrying on during the period mentioned the business of a vendor or dealer in imitation jewellery in the County of London, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, or any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain & Ireland & the Isle of Man. *GOLDSOLL v. 490. Contract not to trade within thirty miles of Bournemouth.—Or within thirty miles of Southampton.—Deft., on entering the employment of plffs., who were builders' merchants carrying on business at Southampton with branch offices at Bournemouth, Poole, Branksome, Portsmouth, & Guildford, covenanted that he would not for the period of fourteen years after the termination of his employment, at any place within a radius of 30 miles either from the town hall at Bournemouth or from the Bargate at Southampton, carry on or be concerned or interested in any capacity in carrying on the business of a builders' merchant or manufacturer of or dealer in cement, lime, bricks, plaster, laths, whitening, & any other building materials which at any time during his employment should be manufactured by or dealt in or sold on commission by plffs., or any other business, trade, or manufacture not within the foregoing of the same or a like nature or character as the business then carried on or which during his employment might be carried on by plffs. Deft. after leaving plffs.' employment, carried on business as a builders' merchant within 7 miles of the town hall at Bournemouth:—Held: the area was larger than was reasonably required for the protection of plffs.' trade, & on that ground the covenant was unreasonable.—HOOPER & ASHBY v. WILLIS (1906), 94 L. T. 621; 22 T. L. R. 451, C. A.

491. Contract not to trade within any district where employers trading.—By a contract dated Jan. 22, 1906, plffs. engaged deft. as a traveller for a certain assigned district. The contract contained a provision that deft. should not within a period of five years from the termination of his engagement with plffs., either by himself or in connection with any other person or persons, carry on the trade or business of a coal & coke factor or merchant or colliery agent or any of them, or any department thereof, within a radius of 5 miles from any railway station or port serving a district in which the employers were trading by themselves, their agents or travellers or otherwise during the engagement of deft.:—Held: (1) this was one covenant, it was not severable, & (2) it was far too wide for the reasonable protection of the employers & therefore could not be enforced.—CLAUKE, SHARP & CO., LTD. v. SOLOMON (1920), 37 T. L. R. 176, C. A.

496. Contract not to "solicit orders or in any way deal with" customers.] It is not necessary for me to consider further whether some part of the agreement can be severed as good, from the rest which is bad, because I think the whole is good; but I may add that, in my opinion, I could sever the earlier part of the clause in question, viz., the words "call upon or directly or indirectly solicit orders," from the latter portion, viz., the words "or in any way deal or transact business with" the old customers, if it were necessary (CHITTY, J.).—MILLS v. DUNHAM, [1891] 1 Ch. 576; 60 L. J. Ch. 362; 64 L. T. 712; 39 W. R. 289; 7 T. L. R. 238, C. A.

497. Contract not to "interfere with any customer or any person in habit of dealing with master."]—Pltf. K. had employed deft. under a written agreement at a weekly salary determinable by a week's notice as a saleswoman, & deft. had covenanted "not at any time during or after the determination of the employment directly or indirectly, either on her own account or for any other person, or firm, or co., to solicit, interfere with, or endeavour to entice away from the master any customer of or any person or persons in the habit of dealing with the master;" & she had also covenanted "not at any time after the determination of the employment to advertise that she was late with K." Subsequently pltf. discharged deft. with a week's wages in lieu of notice, refusing to allow her to work out the week's notice, & shortly afterwards deft. had entered the employment of R. who at one time had been with K. While in the employment of R. she had addressed a circular to S. who had been a customer of pltf. for ten years, but during the last two years had dealt elsewhere. The firm had also advertised as "R. late of K." Pltf. alleged that deft. was in fact in partnership with R. & that these acts were breaches of her covenants. Dft. alleged that by dismissal with a week's wages in lieu of notice, pltf. had abandoned his right to sue on the covenant.—Held: (1) there was no partnership & no breach of the covenant against advertising; the master had by paying a week's wages discharged all his obligation under the contract, which was not therefore abandoned; & the covenant as to soliciting, etc., was too wide to be reasonable & was not severable; (2) the agreement not to solicit customers could not be confined by construction to persons who were customers during the employment, but extended to all persons who were customers at the date of the agreement or at any time after that date.—KONSKI v. 506. — — —]—"Or any business "similar to any business carried on during period of employment.""]—In 1908 pltf. co. agreed to employ deft. F. as manager of the co. at Liverpool for five years from Jan., 1909, & by clause 7 it was provided that the manager should not for a period of one year after the determination of the agreement, whether by effluxion of time or in any other way whatsoever, either solely or jointly with or as agent for any other person, firm or co., directly or indirectly carry on or be engaged, concerned or interested in carrying on, within the United Kingdom the trade or business of an importer of meat or an agent for importers of meat, or any other trade or business similar to any trade or business carried on during the period of his employment by the co., except with the consent in writing of the directors for the time being.

At the date of agreement pltf. co.'s business as importers or agents for importers was confined to the Australasian trade as distinguished from the American trade, though they did so in business as wholesale dealers in meat, including American meat. The business was conducted almost entirely in the north of England & the Midlands, but it had since undergone considerable expansion. In proceedings to enforce clause 7 of the agreement it was admitted that the concluding part of the clause was too wide, but it was contended that the clause was severable & that the first part was not too wide & was enforceable by injunction:—Held: clause 7 of the agreement was severable but the restraint against carrying on within the United Kingdom the business of a meat importer or agent for meat importers was wider than was reasonably required for the protection of pltf. co. because it embraced the American trade as well as the Australasian trade & could not be fairly construed as referring to the latter trade alone, & because it extended to the whole of the United Kingdom, & the clause was therefore void as being in undue restraint of trade notwithstanding the time limit of one year.

I may clear the ground at once from a suggestion that, in view of certain remarks of LORD Moulton in the recent case of Mason v. Provident Clothing & Supply Co., No. 143, ante, this part of the covenant is invalidated, because the succeeding part of the covenant, namely, that prohibiting the carrying on by the manager of any trade or business similar to any trade or business carried on during the period of his employment by the co., is, admittedly, too wide. I do not think that those remarks were intended to be applicable to cases where the two parts of a covenant are expressed in such a way as to amount to a clear severance by the parties themselves, & as to be substantially equivalent to two separate covenants (*SARGENT, J.A. persons or co. directly or indirectly carry on or be engaged or interested in any business that would compete with that carried on by the co. In Apr., 1909, a receiver & manager was appointed in a debenture-holder's action, & a compulsory winding-up order was made against the co. The receiver & manager having given notice to deft. that his services would no longer be required, & having ceased to pay his salary, deft. commenced to carry on business on his own account. In an action to restrain deft. from carrying on business in competition with the co. in breach of his covenant:—Held: pltf. co. could not have specific performance of clause (b) without performing, & they could not now perform, clause (a) in favour of deft., & consequently he was no longer bound by his restrictive covenant & the co. were not entitled to an injunction. *MEASURES BROTHERS, LTD. v. SECT. 8.—BREACH.

SUB-SECT. 1.—WHAT CONSTITUTES BREACH.

A. Covenant Not to be Interested, Concerned or Engaged in Similar Trade, Business or Profession.

(a) In General.

515. Test of similarity—Sufficiently similar to compete.—Pltfs. granted a lease to the A. B. Co. containing a covenant that the tenants would not carry on the business of a restaurant similar to that carried on by R., another tenant of pltfs. R. was an hotel keeper who had a restaurant on licensed premises connected with his hotel. The A. B. Co. carried on a restaurant at which they sold tea, coffee, cocoa, pastry, & cold meat, but not any hot meat except beef pies, & this was not objected to. The A. B. Co. having assigned their lease to deft., he proceeded in his restaurant to sell hot meat & other things not sold by the A. B. Co. Deft. had not a license for the sale of intoxicants, nor a victualler's license; his establishment was on a much smaller scale than that of R., his premises were of an inferior class to those of R., & his prices were much lower:—Held: the test whether deft.'s business was similar to that of R. was whether it was sufficiently like it to compete with it, & judging by this rule, although there were considerable differences between R.'s business & that of deft., deft.'s business was similar to that of R., & an injunction must be granted in the terms of the covenant, with a proviso that it was not to prevent deft. from selling any of the articles in which the A. B. Co. had dealt.—DREW v. GUY, [1891] 3 Ch. 25; 63 L. J. Ch. 547; 71 L. T. 220; 58 J. P. 803; 7 R. 220, C. A.

n. Covenant by employee. Whether extinguished by dismissal.—In an agreement in writing an employee undertook that in case he “left” the employment of his master “for any cause whatever,” he would not for a period of seven years start a similar business within fifteen miles of the town where his employer carried on business. He was dismissed by his employer & immediately started in business in the same town:—Held: the word “leave” did not connote dismissal, & therefore there was no breach of the agreement.—COLEBORNE v. KEARNS (1912), 46 J. L. T. 305.—JR.

he would not either solely or jointly or as agent or manager carry on or be interested in a similar business or any business of a like or similar nature. Deft. held 100 shares in & was a director of a co. which manufactured dairy utensils & were general dairy outfitters, & which sold to a limited extent annatto, which they bought wholesale from pltf., to some of their customers:—Held: the co. were carrying on a competing business, & deft. must be restrained by injunction in the terms of the covenant.—CASTELLI v. MIDDLETON (1901), 17 T. L. R. 373.

519. Agreement restrictive during membership of association—Resignation of membership.—By one of the rules of the Carters Old Co., of Liverpool, it is provided "that any proprietor who may directly or indirectly engage any merchants' or brokers' work, who is charged in the co., or if it be offered him to do by the principals or any servant of the said house, to be fined in the sum of £50 for each house so taken, or should any house be uncharged, the fine to be the same, if taken within six months." It is also provided that no proprietor leave the co. without giving the agents six months' notice in writing, under a penalty of £50. Pltf. being a proprietor, on June 27, 1859, wrote to the secretary, giving him notice of his intention to resign the proprietorship on June 30. He made two engagements with merchants before June 30 & three more within a period of six months after that date:—Held: upon the construction of the language of the rule, pltf. was liable to a fine of £50 in respect of each engagement entered into before he ceased to be a proprietor, but he was not liable to any fine in respect of any engagement entered into after he had left the co.—BRANCKER v. ROBERTS (1861), 3 Giff. 276; 5 L. T. 303; 7 Jur. N. S. 1185; 66 E. R. 413.

520. Agreement not to advertise former trade connection with specified person—Advertisement as "late of & formerly of" a particular place.—A. for valuable consideration covenanted with B. that he would not carry on certain businesses within ten miles of the town of O., & would not "by publication, advertisement, circular, or otherwise hold himself out to have been, nor seek to induce others to believe him to have been, formerly connected in trade, either as partner, manager, or servant, with B."

A. & B. had carried on business in co-partnership at M. & O., & B. still continued to carry on business at those places:—Held: the covenant was not unnecessarily wide for B.'s protection, nor in general restraint of trade; & an advertisement issued by A., in which he described himself as "late of O. & formerly of M.," was a breach of the covenant, & an injunction granted accordingly.—WOLMERSHAUSEN v. O'CONNOR (1877), 36 L. T. 921.

Subsequently, he became the manager, at a fixed salary, of the business of another person carrying on the same trade, within the prescribed time & place:—Held: this was not a breach of the covenant.—*ALLEN v. 529. ———.—] A tailor, having sold the goodwill of his business, covenanted with the purchaser not to "carry on or be concerned or interested in" the business of a tailor within a fixed distance from his former shop. He then engaged himself, as a journeyman tailor, to his nephew, who carried on the same trade & under the same name within the prescribed limits. Upon bill filed by the purchaser:—Held: this was a breach of the covenant, & injunction granted accordingly.

It is admitted that deft. has engaged himself as shopman or foreman to his nephew, who bears the same name as himself, & that not a quarter of a mile from his former place of business. The only question is, whether he is not "concerned or interested in the trade or business of a tailor" within the meaning of the covenant? . . . Every journeyman or workman is interested in the condition of his master's business. . . . I am satisfied that deft. has brought himself both within the spirit & the letter of the covenant, & there must be an injunction against him (MALINS, V.-C.).—NEWLING v. DOBELL (1868), 38 L. J. from acting as such :—Held : (1) as the agreement recited in the bond was for the protection of the business carried on by H. & P., & they had in the business a joint interest during their partnership, & several interests in the event of a dissolution, the agreement must be taken to be several as well as joint, & that P. could sue alone for a breach of it ; (2) there had been a breach of it, for that a person acting as a surgeon was carrying on the profession of a surgeon, although he only acted as salaried assistant to a surgeon who carried it on for his own benefit.

It is true that in Allen v. Taylor, No. 524, ante, where there was a contract not to carry on the trade of a rag dealer, it was held that merely acting as clerk or assistant to a person carrying on that trade, was not a breach of the covenant. But an agreement not to carry on a trade is a very different thing from an agreement not to carry on a business or profession. "Carrying on a trade" implies to my mind that the person engaged in it is engaged in it qua trade, that is to say, as a trade producing profit or loss which is to be shared by him, & that is not the case if he is merely a salaried assistant. I cannot come to the conclusion that a man is less carrying on the profession of a surgeon because he is doing so as assistant to some one else. "Profession" is different from trade, & it is much more emphatic to my mind than if "business" alone were here. When, as here, the words "carry on the business or profession of a surgeon" are merely used to denote what is done by a man acting as a surgeon, a man, in my opinion, acts as surgeon & carries on the business of a surgeon none the less because he is not the principal or engaged in the business as a partner, but is merely carrying it on as assistant to somebody else (COTTON, L.J.).

Company servants & agents—Voluntary liquidation of company—New company formed with same name.—An injunction was obtained by pltf. against a co., restraining them, their servants & agents, from soliciting the custom of persons who before the sale of a certain part of their business to pltf. were their customers. Thereafter the co. went into voluntary liquidation, & a new co. was formed under the same name, to which were transferred the assets & business of the old co. :—Held : as the reconstruction of the old co. had been regularly carried out for the sake of obtaining new capital & not colourably for the sake of evading the order, the new co. became an independent co. & was in no sense the servant or agent of the old, & therefore in soliciting a customer of pltf. the new co. committed no breach of the injunction which has been obtained.—BOSCH v. SIMMS MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 419.

548. Covenant by wife—Before marriage—Business carried on by husband.—A. agreed under a penalty that she would not take, keep, be interested or concerned in any licensed house within one mile of pltf.'s premises. A. afterwards married a publican having a licensed house within one mile of pltf.'s premises & assisted him in his business :—Held : there was no breach of the agreement.—LOE v. LANDER (1856), 27 L. T. O. S. 160 ; 4 W. R. 597.

549. Covenant by husband—Business established by wife—For benefit of nephew.—Deft., who had been carrying on the business of a grocer under the style of "T. P. Hancock," sold the business to pltf., & entered into an agreement not to "carry on or be in anywise interested in" any similar business within a specified area. About seven years later the wife of deft., desiring, against his wishes, to start her nephew in business, opened a grocer's shop within the specified area, & carried on business there under the style of "Mrs. T. P. Hancock." The business was managed by the nephew, & deft.'s wife took some part in carrying it on ; but deft. took no part. The money necessary for starting the business was found by the wife out of her separate estate, & no money whatever was contributed by deft., either towards starting the business or carrying it on, nor did he share in the profits in any way. He, however, introduced his wife to his bankers, where she opened an account in her own name, assisted her in obtaining the lease of the shop in her own name, introduced the nephew to the wholesale merchants who had supplied the old business, & as his wife was disabled by rheumatism from writing, wrote for her a circular inviting "old friends" to come to the shop. He also handed copies of the circular to some few persons, including a tenant of his own :—Held : there had been no breach of the agreement by deft.

When a person sells a business & agrees not to carry on, or be in any way interested in any similar business, the word "interested" is used to prevent him, not only from carrying it on, but also from having any proprietary or pecuniary interest in it (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*SMITH v. J., purporting to act as manager for his father, began to carry on the business of a general storekeeper in the town of A., admittedly in competition with pltf. :—Held : the words "enter into" should receive a wide construction ; & deft. J., whether really acting for his father, or whether operating on his own behalf, was guilty of a breach of his covenant,

B. afterwards sold his business & goodwill to pltf. & ceded to him his right under the agreement with deft. to whom notice of the cession was given :—Held : deft. had by his contract undertaken not to carry on a business of the nature of the one he had sold, which undertaking was not of so personal a nature as to be incapable of being ceded, & consequently pltf. could enforce the agreement.—DUNHAM v. TRAUTMAN (1891), 9 S. C. 14.—S. AF.

557. — Covenant not to engage in competing business.—Deft., an admitted solr., having accepted the situation of clerk to pltf., a solr. practising at N., entered into a bond with pltf. which recited that deft. had been recently appointed agent to O., & was conditioned to be void if deft. should abstain from practising as a solr. in N., or within thirty miles from thence, without the consent of pltf.; & should not act as O.'s legal adviser, except as pltf.'s clerk; & should not accept or undertake any other agency or appointment, except such as he then held, without pltf.'s consent, & in case the engagement should be put an end to or determined, should not continue to act as agent for O.

Shortly afterwards deft. was a candidate for the office of clerk to the board of guardians; whereupon pltf. gave him three months' notice of putting an end to his engagement. After the expiration of the three months, deft. resigned his appointment as agent to O., but afterwards resumed the same. Deft. also obtained the situation & was performing the duties of clerk to the board of guardians, & since the filing of the bill, obtained the situation of clerk to the Commissioners of Land Tax. Deft. withdrew from the partnership business & started a similar business on his own account at an office outside the prohibited radius. In the course of such business he endeavoured to let two houses within the prohibited radius, & he put up notice boards at three houses directing intending tenants to apply to him at his office & inserted advertisements of these intended lettings in a newspaper:—Held: these acts were a breach of the covenant, & an injunction granted.—*HADSLY v. H. agreed that during the term he would devote his whole time & attention to the business of the co., & that he would not during the engagement, without the consent of the co., engage as principal or servant in any business relating to goods of any description made or sold by the co., or in any other business whatever, upon pain of instant dismissal. H. covenanted that if he should be so dismissed he would not at any time within three years from his dismissal be engaged directly or indirectly as principal, agent, or servant in the business of dealer in wares of the description made by the co., within 150 miles of W. In 1898 H. left the service of the co. without leave & became traveller to another firm carrying on the same business. the continuance of the engagement, the agreement made by H, with the co. that he would not engage in any business relating to goods sold by the co. was valid though not restricted in point of space, & it was severable from the agreement not to engage in any other business, & ought to be enforced by injunction. An injunction was therefore granted as asked, but limited to the first term of five years, the co. waiving their option to retain H, in their service for another five years, & the ct. doubting whether the agreement ought to be enforced for that further term.—ROBINSON (WILLIAM) & CO., LTD. v. Act, 1862 (c. 89), as manager of a branch, & he agreed that he would not within a year of the termination of the agreement either by notice or as thereafter provided, enter into the service of or in any way act for any bank carrying on business within a radius of five miles of any branch of the bank to which he might be appointed manager. The banking co. were empowered to put an end to the agreement in the event of deft. being guilty of misconduct. The banking co. afterwards passed resolutions for voluntary winding up, & liquidators were appointed for the purpose of selling their business & goodwill to another banking co. Deft. thereupon left the co.'s branch bank & entered the service of another bank at the same place. The co. thereupon gave him a month's notice to terminate the agreement, & brought an action to restrain him from entering the service of the other bank in breach of the agreement: Held: the voluntary winding up did not operate as a dismissal of the co.'s servants, & therefore the co. were entitled to the injunction claimed. MIDLAND COUNTIES DISTRICT BANK, LTD. v. As part of the consideration for the purchase of the goodwill B. covenanted not to carry on business at a particular place. A. covenanting to employ B. B. having been dismissed, set up business in breach of his covenant: Held: although there was not sufficient evidence to show that B. had been properly dismissed, yet A. was entitled to an injunction to restrain B. from committing a breach of his covenant. — DAGGETT v. The agreement was wholly affirmative, & contained no express stipulation that deft. should not do any particular thing. He being about to set up & become a director of a rival co., the judge granted an injunction to restrain him from giving less than the whole of his time to the co.'s business:

570. — Duty to elect remedy.]—By an agreement made in 1890, plff. agreed to employ, & deft. to work for & serve plff. as tailor, hosier, or outfitter, & it was agreed: that deft. should not for the space of three years act as tailor, hosier, or outfitter, or take service or act as agent in such business within a radius of twenty-five miles of plff.'s shop, under a penalty of £500 as liquidated damages. On June 10, 1893, deft. left plff.'s service, & committed a breach of the agreement. Plff. brought this action claiming an injunction & £500 liquidated damages for breach of the agreement, & on motion obtained an interim injunction. The action was then set down for the point of law to be argued as to whether deft. was not, on payment of £500, absolved from any obligation under the agreement. Plff. now asked for an injunction, but withdrew the claim for damages: Held: (1) deft. ought, when the motion came on, to have called on plff. to elect whether he asked for an injunction or liquidated damages, as he could not have both, & the pleadings were therefore embarrassing to deft.; (2) deft. having gone on, was too late in taking the point, & there must be an injunction for three years after July 10, 1893.—*GENT v. 589. — Agreement not to use pseudonym.—Reputation established under pseudonym.

(1) Pltfs., who were film producers, employed deft. as a film actor. His contract of employment required him to act under a pseudonym, which should be the sole property of pltfs. On the determination of the contract he was precluded from using the pseudonym for any purpose whatever & from film acting for new employers unless & until they agreed not to announce or advertise his performance under the pseudonym. Owing partly to his own ability & partly to pltfs.' advertisements deft. acquired a considerable reputation under the pseudonym in which his professional identity became so completely merged, that his market value without it would be diminished more than 50 per cent. until his identity & reputation were re-established de novo. Deft. having entered the service of rival film producers under the pseudonym, pltfs. sued for an injunction:—Held: in the circumstances the contract was in partial restraint of trade & not reasonably required for the protection of the employers, & for this reason would not be enforced.

(2) A restraint of trade is prima facie contrary to public policy. It is a misapprehension to suggest that this doctrine is confined merely to restraint of trade in any ordinary meaning of the word "trade"; it extends further than trade, it undoubtedly extends to the exercise of a man's profession or calling (ATKIN, L.J.).—*HEPWORTH MANUFACTURING CO. v. It was alleged by pltfs. that deft. permitted the representation of one of his sketches on a cinematograph at certain picture palaces within the prescribed area, & they brought an action against him to restrain him from this alleged breach of the agreement:—Held: on the evidence, deft. had taken no part

F. accepted, received £20 deposit, & wrote regularly for some weeks; then went to Paris, sent an abrupt conclusion of the then current tale in a small quantity of manuscript, refused to proceed with his engagement with S., & entered into another engagement with C. S. thereupon stopped his payments to F., & employed another author to conclude the half finished tale:—Held: the condition as to F. not engaging elsewhere was valid.—STIFF v. CASS, L. (1856), 2 Jur. N. S. 318.

600. — Option to publisher to publish subsequent works.]—Pltfs. entered into a written agreement with deft., Mrs. E., an authoress, for the publication of a novel already written by her, & by the same agreement secured an option to publish her "next three books" upon certain royalty terms therein contained. The agreement provided that if they exercised their option in the case of any of her next three books, pltfs. were during the legal term of the copyright to have the exclusive right of producing & publishing the book within a defined area together with the entire control of the publication & terms of sale of the book, & also the right of suing in respect of infringement of copyright. The agreement also provided that Mrs. E. was not without the consent of pltfs. to publish, or allow to be published, any abridgment, translation or dramatised version of the books, & that on the determination of the agreement in certain events therein specified the right to print & publish the book was to revert to Mrs. E. who was then to be entitled to be registered as the proprietor thereof. In breach of this agreement Mrs. E. agreed with defts. C. & Co., a rival firm of publishers, who had notice of pltfs.' agreement, to print & publish her next novel. In an action by pltfs. to restrain both defts. from publishing the novel until it had been first submitted to pltfs. for their acceptance:—Held: the agreement was not a contract of personal service but was a contract by Mrs. E. to sell the products of her labour or industry, of which the ct. would grant specific performance by restraining her from disposing of the novel in breach of her agreement with pltfs.—*MACDONALD v. g. Validity or reasonableness of restraint—Agreement with publisher—Not to publish a similar work.]—Deft. G. wrote a book for school use, the copyright in which he assigned to pltf., & agreed not to publish any similar work during the subsistence of the agreement. He subsequently wrote for defts. F. a book on the same lines, adopting the same system, repeating the same kind of lessons, intended practically for the same class of pupils, & F. Bros. published it at a like low price:—Held: the agreement was not in unreasonable restraint of trade; & defts.

h. Validity or reasonableness of restraint—Ten years & eight miles.]—Deft. by an agreement in writing sold the goodwill of his bakery business, together with the tools, plant, & stock-in-trade to pltf. The agreement contained (inter alia) the following clause: "The vendor shall not during the period of ten years from the date hereof within the radius of eight miles from the premises where the said business of baker is now carried on by the vendor carry on conduct or assist in carrying on or conducting or be concerned or interested directly or indirectly in the business of selling or in manufacturing bread or that class of goods known to the bakery trade as smallgoods." Deft. engaged himself as a journeyman baker to a baker carrying on business within the radius of eight miles:—Held: the restriction was not void as being in restraint of trade.—GRANTHAM v. CAMPBELL (1910), 29 N. Z. L. R. 1019.—N.Z.

& obtained a situation with another bank which was admittedly an Eastern Exchange Bank within the meaning of the rule. He then claimed to be credited by defts. with the amount of his contributions to the pension fund, on the ground (inter alia) that the rule depriving him of the right to recover them was void as in restraint of trade:—Held: the rule was not wider than was reasonably necessary to protect defts., & therefore it was not void as being in restraint of trade, & the action failed.—SPIENCE v. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD. (1921), 37 T. L. R. 745, C. A.

Plffs. had a large business in England, & were extending their business to other countries in different parts of the world. Within five years after leaving plffs.’ employment deft. entered into the employment of a person carrying on a similar business in England competing with plffs.—Held: the covenant was not unreasonable as being too wide, & was therefore valid.—*WHITE, TOMKINS & COURAGE v. 614. ————Covenant not to carry on business within five miles.]—A butcher, on assigning, for the residue of a term, certain premises upon which he has carried on his business, together with the fixtures & the goodwill of the trade, covenanted with the purchaser, that he would not at any time thereafter, either by himself, or as agent or journeyman for another, set up, exercise, or carry on, or be employed in, the trade or business of a butcher, within 5 miles from the premises thereby assigned:—Held: (1) not an unreasonable restraint, either in respect of time or in respect of distance; (2) the covenant did not cease to be a binding covenant, on the expiration of the term, or on the covenantor’s ceasing, by himself or his assigns, to carry on the business assigned.

If the covenant is binding to its full extent, when made, its signification cannot be varied by any subsequent occurrence: & to hold otherwise would be to render its import uncertain & to impair its efficiency for that protection which the law contemplates as just (per CUR.).—*ELVES v. trators, should not at any time thereafter exercise the trade of a common carrier from, etc., to etc., as above, & that A. should pay M. a certain sum for the goodwill. After reciting further the actual resignation of the business by M. & payment of the sum stipulated M. in consideration of such payment, covenanted to A. his exors., administrators, & assigns, that M. his heirs, exors., & administrators, should not take in or convey any goods or articles whatever from London to the other places above mentioned, or from them to London, which places were formerly connected with the said carrying concern, & for the relinquishment of the carriage to which M. had received the above consideration. A.'s exors. brought covenant on the deed, & alleged as a breach that M. had taken in & conveyed divers goods & articles from London to other places above mentioned, which were before the making of the deed connected, etc., & from those places to London, contrary to the tenor of the deed & of his covenant therein:—Held: (1) the breach was assigned with sufficient particularity, though it did not allege that M. conveyed the goods as a common carrier; (2) where a party has agreed to forego a business for a consideration, the ct. cannot enter into the reasonableness of the restraint as compared with the consideration; & therefore, although the restriction here was unlimited as to time, the covenant could not be pronounced void as operating in undue restraint of trade. ARCHER v. MARSH (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 959; 2 Nev. & P. K. B. 562; Will. Woll. & Dav. 611; 6 L. J. K. B. 244; 112 E. R. 366.

618. — Covenant restraining trade otherwise than as assistant to covenantee.—For lifetime of covenantor.—(1) The rule of law is that a contract in general restraint of trade is void as against the policy of the law; but, if the contract be made upon sufficient consideration & the public gain some advantage it will be good.

Pltf. by deed, sold to defts. his trade & business as a carrier between London & Wisbech, & in consideration of the covenants therein contained on defts.' part, covenanted with them that he would not thenceforth during his life exercise the trade of a carrier, except as thereafter mentioned; & that he would thenceforth during his life faithfully serve deft. as an assistant in the trade of a carrier; and defts., in consideration of the before-mentioned covenants, & of the pltf.'s faithful service as aforesaid, covenanted to pay him a certain weekly sum for his life. In an action against defts. on this covenant: Held: pltf.'s covenant to serve during his life was good in law, & the covenant in restraint of his trade was not void, inasmuch as he was not absolutely restrained from carrying on the trade, but only from carrying on in any other way than as an assistant to defts. Qu.: whether, supposing this covenant were void, as being in general restraint of trade, pltf.

could nevertheless have sued on defts.' covenant to pay.

(2) In partnership agreements, nothing is more common than to stipulate that neither party shall carry on trade except as a partner . . . it was urged, however, that as the contract is to serve for life, it is illegal. There is no authority for that position & I know of no principle that makes it so (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—WALLIS v. DAY (1837), 2 M. & W. 273; Murp. & H. 22; 6 L. J. Ex. 92; 1 Jur. 73; 150 E. By an agreement deft. agreed to serve both the principal & subsidiary cos. in such capacity as should be from time to time appointed, & that he would not in the United Kingdom enter the service of any competing firms within five years from the termination of his employment with the principal & subsidiary cos. without the consent in writing of the principal co. It was also provided that all restrictions & conditions were to be as if made with each co., & could be enforced by that particular co. in whose service deft. happened to be. Deft. had been in the service of the principal co., but just before the agreement was signed he was transferred to one of the subsidiary cos., whose business was confined to the three northern counties of England. He was shortly afterwards dismissed, & then entered the service of a competing firm: Held: the agreement deft. had entered into was only a contract between deft. & the individual co. into whose service he entered; therefore it was a contract between him & the subsidiary co. alone & was too wide as to space & therefore void; & the fact that all the cos. had a common management & were interested in each other's business did not affect the case, as the contract must be for the protection of the particular business in which the man was employed.

A man who has no interest in the business at all cannot take a covenant from a man that he will not enter into that particular business; it does not concern him, and it is against public policy, because it restricts trading in the United Kingdom (FARWELL, L.J.).—LEETHAM (HENRY) & SONS, LTD. v. 635. — — — — Agreement not to deal with customers in any commodity.]—By an agreement between a firm of hop merchants & their traveller, the latter was bound to travel, solicit orders, & collect moneys for the firm from their customers who were mentioned in a book signed by the employers & the traveller, which book was to be the property of the firm & to be delivered up by the traveller on the determination of his employment & at such other times as might be required by his employers, who might at any time add to or withdraw from the book the name of any person; & in the case of such withdrawal the traveller was to have no interest in any business thereafter done with the person whose name might be so withdrawn. The traveller was prohibited without the written consent of his employers from calling upon, soliciting orders, or receiving money from any persons other than those whose names appeared in the book, & was also prohibited for a period of five years after the determination of the agreement directly or indirectly, either as principal, agent or servant, from soliciting orders for any goods or marketable commodity whatsoever from or calling upon any brewers, customers, or persons from whom he might have obtained or solicited orders, or upon whom he might have called whilst in the employ of the firm. The firm dealt with hops only, & the traveller whilst in their employ was concerned only with hops. The book mentioned in the agreement contained at the date of the determination of the traveller's engagement with the firm the names of about 100 customers of the firm. After the determination of such engagement the traveller proposed to enter the service of malsters & to solicit orders for malt from (inter alia) persons from whom he had solicited orders for hops when in the employment of the hop merchants. On a motion by the hop merchants to restrain him from so doing as being a breach of his agreement with them: Held: (1) the restrictive clause was one which in the interests of the public was not reasonable; (2) it was wider than was necessary for the protection of plffs.' business, & was therefore void.—MORRIS & Co. v. RYLE (1910), 103 L. T. 545; 26 T. L. R. 678; 51 Sol. Jo. 748, C. A.

Provided that this clause shall only be enforceable so long as the co. or its assigns enforcing the same shall continue to carry on or be carrying on such business or part thereof:—Held: the restriction imposed by the clause was necessary for the protection of plffs.' business, & was not void as being in restraint of trade.—*MILLERS, LTD. v. 641. — No time limit—Agreement not to carry on business with customers—Similar business as covenantant.] (1) An agreement for the employment of deft. as a traveller provided, that he was to "call upon & solicit orders" for all articles in the way of plffs.' business of antiseptic manufacturers, & in the event of the termination of the agreement, that he should not, either on his own account or for any employer, "call upon, or directly or indirectly solicit orders from, or in any way deal or transact business with," any one, who had, while the agreement was in force, been a customer of plffs. After the termination of the agreement, deft. entered the employment of rival antiseptic manufacturers, & as their traveller, called upon & solicited orders from some of plffs.' customers. On motion by plffs. to restrain deft. from committing any further breach of the agreement:—Held: the meaning of the agreement, according to its true construction, was to prevent deft., after leaving plffs.' employ, from transacting, with persons who had been customers of plffs. while the agreement was in force, business of a similar kind to that carried on by plffs.; this was not a greater restraint than was necessary for the protection of the employers; & the agreement was therefore valid & could be enforced to this extent.

Agreements in restraint of trade will be con-traveller by pltf. for ten years, from Apr. 1, 1889, upon the terms (inter alia) that deft. would not within twelve years from Apr. 1, 1889, or for two years after the termination of his employment, if same should continue beyond ten years, engage in business similar to that carried on by pltf., or act as commercial traveller for any person or body, carrying on similar strued by the ct. in the same manner as in any other agreements.

Stipulations of this kind are looked upon as advantageous to the public if so restricted as not to go beyond what is needed for the protection of the employer. They ought not then to be construed with or bias as being prima facie illegal, but construed fairly (KAY, L.J.).

The first thing we have to do is to ascertain the real meaning of the parties by construing the agreement without any leaning either way (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(2) The contention that you are to treat a restraint of trade as prima facie bad & throw upon the person supporting it the onus of showing that it is reasonable is introducing a wholly unsound principle into the construction of documents (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*MILLS v. 646. — "Any trade or business"—Trade or business in competition with covenantor.]—By an agreement, dated Aug. 1880, & made between pltf., who was described as an agent of commission merchant carrying on business under the style of M. & co., of the one part, & deft. F. of the other part, deft. agreed to enter pltf.'s service as clerk business, providing that such restriction should only extend to such counties in Ireland as deft. should travel in for pltf. at any time during his employment: Held: a reasonable at a certain salary. Clause 4 of the agreement provided as follows: "In case the employment of P. shall be determined by any cause whatever, he shall not during the period of five years thence next following carry on or engage in, either as principal, agent, clerk, or otherwise, any trade or business in the United Kingdom in connection with any kind of goods of Continental manufacture which the firm of M. & co. shall have dealt in at any time previously to such determination." In 1892 deft. left pltf.'s employment & embarked in a rival business, & pltf. applied for an injunction restraining him from carrying on any business in contravention of the above agreement. Deft. contended that the agreement was unreasonable & oppressive, & was void, as being in restraint of trade:—Held: the words "any trade or business" in the covenant did not refer to any retail trade in which such Continental goods might happen to be sold, but to trade or business of a commission merchant; having regard to pltf.'s business, the restriction that deft. should not carry on such business in the United Kingdom was not unreasonably wide; the words "at any time previously" meant during the time of deft.'s employment; & therefore that the restraint was not wider than was reasonably necessary for pltf.'s protection, & the covenant was not void.—*MOENICH v. By a subsequent agreement pltf. agreed to retire from the firm, defts. taking over the management & control of the practice; & pltf. agreed not to, during the term of the late partnership, see any patients of defts. professionally without the latter's consent:—Held: this did not preclude pltf. from attending on those persons who had been his own patients exclusively while he was a partner.—*HARRIS v. Breach, that after the expiration of the term, deft. did reside within the distance of 2½ miles of the premises, No. 28, Dorset Crescent. The plea traversed this allegation; & after verdict for pltf.:—Held: (1) the distance was to be measured, not by the most frequented public ways, but by any of the usual public ways; (2) the covenant not to reside at any time within the prescribed distance was not unreasonable or void.—*ATKYNs v. A bond in restraint of trade cannot be arbitrarily taken & without consideration; some consideration must appear (LORD KENYON, C.J.).

It was objected that the limits within which deft. engaged not to practise are unreasonable; but I do not see that they are necessarily unreasonable, nor do I know how to draw the line. Neither are the public likely to be injured by an agreement of this kind, since every other person is at liberty to practise as a surgeon in this town (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—*DAVIS v. find him some other description of work, provided he should not require that quantity of the specified work, so that A.'s wages should not be less than 24s. per week, except when a furnace should be out, when A. agreed to work for 21s. per week; & it was agreed, that, if A. should be sick or otherwise incapacitated from performing the service, or in case of misconduct, or if B., or his partner or partners for the time being, or either or such of them as should carry on the trade, should discontinue the trade during the term, in either of such cases, B. or his partners should be at liberty to retain or employ any other person in the room or stead of A. without being obliged to pay him any wages or satisfaction:—Held: this agreement was not void for want of mutuality, or as being in unreasonable restraint of trade.—HARTLEY v. CUMMINGS (1847), 5 C. B. 247; 17 L. J. C. P. 81; 10 L. T. O. S. 247; 12 Jur. 57; 136 E. R. 871.

688. — Five years—United Kingdom.—Pltf. co. & deft. entered into an agreement under which deft. was to be employed as works engineer at pltf.'s works & was not to divulge any trade secret during his employment or thereafter except in the proper course of business & on the determination of his employment he was not, for five years, to carry on in the United Kingdom or to be interested in glass bottle manufacture or any other business connected with glass making carried on by the pltf.s:—Held: the agreement was not unreasonably in restraint of trade.—*FORSTER & SONS, LTD. v. 692. — Covenant not to trade within same district—For two years.—BENWELL v. INNS, No. 395, ante.

693. — Covenant not to trade within two miles—For two years.—An infant entered into the service of a milk seller, & covenanted not to carry on the same trade, & after he came of age he continued in the same service for 18 months without repudiating the contract:—Held: this conduct amounted to a ratification of the contract in equity, & an injunction to restrain a breach of the covenant was granted.

It was a kind of contract well known & not unusual, for the trade of a milkman was one where the servant was in constant communication with the customers, while they never saw the master; & the covenant in question was therefore not an improper one (WICKENS, V.-C.).—*CORNWALL v. 694. — Covenant by infant.—An infant entered into a contract with his employers, milk sellers, not to carry on a milkman's business within a distance of 2 miles nor to solicit his employers' customers, "under a penalty of £200 to be recovered as & by way of liquidated damages & not by way of penalty." In an action for an injunction to restrain the infant from carrying on a milkman's business within the specified distance:—Held: the contract was binding on the infant, the clause as to the payment of the £200 only binding him to pay the damage actually caused by his breach of contract, & not being a penalty clause in the ordinary sense.—MORRISON, FLEET & CO., LTD. v. FLETCHER (1900), 17 T. L. R. 95.

695. — Covenant not to trade in neighbourhood of specified towns.—By an agreement dated Sept. 18, 1893, Martin sold his retail milk business & goodwill to deft. Stride, & covenanted "not to employ any one or retail milk on his own account in the neighbourhood of Southampton or Norham." On a breach of this covenant the county ct. judge granted an injunction in the terms of the covenant. Deft. appealed on the grounds that the covenant was wider than was necessary to protect pltf., & therefore void, & that the injunction was bad, not being sufficiently definite in showing exactly where deft. could not trade:—Held: the covenant was not too wide to protect pltf., & the injunction following the terms of the covenant was not too indefinite as the parties must know its meaning, & the word "neighbourhood" meant immediate neighbourhood.—STRIDE v. MARTIN (1897), 77 L. T. 600, D. C.

696. — Covenant not to trade within twenty miles—For one year—Covenant by cashier employed by wholesale dairymen.—Pltf. co., whose business was to supply milk wholesale & to manufacture dairy products, entered a combine, which required all the employees to enter into service agreements, & deft., who was employed as cashier, entered into such an agreement, which provided that for a year after the termination of his employment he would not assist in carrying on the business of wholesale dairymen or manufacturers of dairy products or dairy utensils within 20 miles of pltf.'s headquarters or interfere for 6 months with any person who had been a customer of pltf.s or of the combine within 18 months of the termination of the agreement. After the date of the agreement pltf.s commenced the manufacture of dairy utensils. Most of pltf.'s customers for milk were within 10 miles from their headquarters, but there were a few beyond that radius, & one or two beyond 20 miles. Pltf.s' customers for dairy products & utensils were all over England. Deft. left pltf.'s employment & entered the employment of a dairy co. in the vicinity. In an action to restrain a breach of the restrictive clause:—Held: pltf.s. had failed to prove that the restrictive clause was necessary for their protection, as there was no evidence justifying such a restriction as 20 miles & as the clause precluded deft., who had been merely a cashier, from occupying any position, not only in a dairy business or that of a manufacturer of dairy products, but in that of a manufacturer of dairy utensils, which pltf.s. were not manufacturing at the date of the agreement, & the action failed.—*GREAT WESTERN & METROPOLITAN DAIRIES, LTD. v. 703. — — — Not to infringe or compete with patents—No time limit.]—In 1903 pltf. granted to defts. a licence by deed to use, within a certain district, the inventions protected by three patents granted to H. in 1897 & relating to the employment of ferro-concrete in the construction of buildings. The deed contained a covenant by defts. that they would not at any time, without the written consent of pltf., carry out, or contract to carry out, the ferro-concrete or similar work which might be an infringement of the patents or be in competition with them. In an action to restrain breaches of the covenant, defts., who were builders having a large business both in, & outside of, the district, alleged that the covenant, if valid, would prevent them using at all in the United Kingdom in their business the modes of building construction which they had used before the date of the licence; they contended that the covenant was wider than was necessary for the protection of the patentee & injurious to the public interest, & was in undue restraint of trade, & void. They tendered evidence to show the scope of the patents, the modes of building prior to, & subsequent to, the date of the patents, the extent & nature of defts.' business at the date of the licence, & the effect which the covenant would have upon their business, & what, having regard to the nature of the patents, was necessary for the protection of the patentee:—Held: (1) the restraint under the covenant continued only during the existence of the patents, which was coterminous with the duration of the licences, & did not extend beyond what was reasonably necessary for the protection of the trade of the covenantee, & was valid, & (2) the evidence tendered by defts. was inadmissible.

(3) It seems to me that when you are dealing with a patent a restraint which does not exceed the ambit of the patent itself is not open to objection on the ground that the area it covers is too wide (NEVILLE, J.).—MOUCHEL v. CUBITT & CO. (1907), 24 R. P. C. 191.

Subsequently, & while deft. was in his service, W. entered into a partnership agreement with pltf. who was on his death to succeed to the business. W. died, & thereupon deft. commenced a school in the same place. On a motion on behalf of pltf. to restrain deft. from so doing:—Held: (1) deft.'s agreement was not limited to the life of W.; (2) though goodwill was not mentioned in the partnership agreement, the benefit thereof did pass so as on the death of W. to vest in pltf., & deft.'s agreement formed part of such goodwill; (3) pltf. was therefore entitled to the benefit thereof, & to the injunction asked for.—*SMITH v. 720. Validity or reasonableness of covenant—Covenant not to practise in particular place—For limited time.]—Articles, under which A. had served his clerkship to an attorney, contained a proviso, that A. should not practise within a certain district; & also a covenant on the part of his father, that A. should, within a month after he came of age, execute a bond in a specified penalty to ensure his fulfilment of the proviso; A., who was an infant at the time of the execution of the articles, served under them for three years after he attained his full age, but was never called on to execute any bond, & with a knowledge of the purport of the articles, completed his clerkship, & afterwards began to practise as an attorney within the district from which the articles purported to exclude him. A motion for an injunction to restrain him from practising within that district was refused with costs.—CAPES v. HUTTON (1826), 2 Russ. 357; 38 E. R. 370.

At the expiration of the term deft. having commenced business on his own account in Southwark:—Held: the restriction was not unreasonable, & deft.'s acting for a petitioner in the London Ct. of Bkpcy. was a breach of the covenant.

The rule is . . . that the restriction must not be so large as to prevent the covenantor from practising at all & not larger than is consistent with the public interest. I think this case quite

724. — Covenant not to reside in specified parish.—(1) By agreement between pltf., a solr., & deft., after reciting that pltf., being manager of certain estates at T., & finding it expedient to establish an office there for the transaction of law & other business had proposed to appoint deft. as resident clerk there—it was agreed, that deft. should reside at T.; & that, in consideration of his services, pltf. should pay him a certain salary; & that either party might determine the agreement by a certain notice; & that deft. would not, for the space of twenty-one years, notwithstanding the decease of pltf., reside in the parish of T., or within twenty-one miles thereof, or carry on therein or within the distance aforesaid, during the period of twenty-one years, any business of the description of that carried on under the agreement:—Held: the restriction was not unreasonable & was good in law.

(2) A declaration on the above agreement alleged as a breach, that, after its determination, deft. resided in the parish of T., & during the said period of twenty-one years carried on business in the parish of the description of that carried on under the agreement. Plea to first breach: that, although deft. resided in the parish of T., yet he did not so reside for the purpose or with the intention of carrying on business of the description of that carried on under the agreement:—Held: whether the allegation in the declaration was to be read as one or two distinct breaches, the plea was bad.

Is it clear that the protection of pltf. does not require that deft. should not reside within the prescribed limits? Dft. must perform his agreement unless he can clearly establish that the restraint is unreasonable (ALDERSON, B.).—DENDY v. HENDERSON (1855), 11 Exch. 194; 24 L. J. Ex. 321; 25 L. T. O. S. 168; 156 E. R. 800.

725. — Covenant not to interfere with clients—Limited to clients during period of service.—A deed recited that pltf. had carried on the business of an attorney, that deft. had for four years been his salaried clerk, & had applied to him to accept deft. as his articulated clerk without premium, which pltf. consented to do on deft.'s entering into the covenants thereafter contained; & deft. bound himself clerk to pltf. for five years by articles; it was then, by the deed, witnessed that, in pursuance, of the agreement, & in consideration of 5s., etc., deft. did, for himself, his heirs, exors. & administrators, thereby covenant with pltf., his exors., administrators, partners & assigns: that deft. should not, during the term of five years mentioned in the articles, nor at any time after its expiration, directly or indirectly, interfere or intermeddle with, or be concerned as attorney, agent or otherwise, for, any person who had already been, or who should from time to time thereafter become or be, the client or correspondent in business of or with pltf., or any partner or partners he might admit to a share with him, or any person to whom he might sell or assign the whole or any part of his business of attorney; & that deft. should not act as partner, clerk or assistant with or to any person who should interfere or intermeddle as aforesaid: & in case deft. should commit any breach of his covenants, he should forfeit & pay, as liquidated damages £100 for every such breach; & each day's repetition or continuance of any interference, etc., as aforesaid should be deemed a fresh breach of covenant, & incur a new & separate penalty & right of action. Pltf. declared in covenant, assigning breaches in respect of persons who had been his clients before & at the time of the making of the deed, & of persons who had been his clients while deft. continued under the articles:—Held: the part of the covenant in respect of which the breaches were assigned was good, as not operating unduly in restriction of trade, & might be separated from the rest; & therefore an action might be brought on such breaches.—NICHOLLS v. STRETTON (1847), 10 Q. B. 346; 11 Jur. 1008; 116 E. R. 134.

726. — Covenant not to act for clients—Clients at time of termination of service—Or within previous five years.—A clerk to a firm of solrs. covenanted that, if his engagement should be terminated, he would not "act for any person who is or has within the previous five years been a client of the firm":—Held: the covenant referred to persons who should be clients of the firm at the time when the clerk's engagement terminated or within five years before that time, & was not wider than was reasonably necessary for the protection of the firm's practice.

As a matter of construction, the covenant . . . was not wider than necessary for the reasonable protection of pltf.'s very considerable practice by restricting one who had been in their confidential employment & had had frequent opportunities of becoming acquainted with their clients & with their clients' affairs, from acting contrary to their interests (SWINFEN EADY, J.).—LEWIS & LEWIS v. DURNFORD (1907), 24 T. L. R. 64.

727. Construction of covenant — "Original clients"—Covenant by partners.—In July, 1880, pltf. & deft. entered into partnership as solrs. Clause 7 of the partnership agreement provided: "Either party is to be at liberty to transact any business in his own name, if he wishes to do so, & also to transact any business for any private friends, or poor persons, without charge, he in such case paying all office out of pocket expenses." Clause 8 provided: "Either party is to be at liberty to terminate this agreement by three months' notice in writing at any time, & in such case neither is to transact any business for, or in any way to influence business with any clients who were original clients of the other. No notice was given to terminate the partnership, but it was dissolved by mutual consent on Aug. 10, 1899. Pltf. now moved for an injunction:—Held: (1) notwithstanding no notice was given, clause 8 of the agreement came into operation when the partnership was dissolved on Aug. 10; (2) "original clients" comprised those who were clients of either pltf. or deft. before they became partners, & also those for whom pltf. or deft. in pursuance of clause 7, transacted business as for private friends or poor persons.—BADHAM v. WILLIAMS (1900), 83 L. T. 141; 44 Sol. Jo. 575.

728. — Covenant by clerk—To remain away from specified town—Not to give services to any except plaintiff in such town.—In 1846, deft. entered into the service of pltf., a solr. at Amer-sham, as his clerk, & in Dec. 1849, pltf. put an end to the service, by a notice, to expire on Mar. 25, 1850. On Jan. 7, 1850, deft. wrote to pltf., asking to be paid his salary to Lady Day, & to be at once discharged, "in order that he might go to London & remain there until he could meet with another engggement." To this letter pltf. replied, assenting to deft.'s proposal saying, "of course, I should have expected your services, if you were in Amersham; but, as you request me at once to pay your salary to Lady Day, in order that you may go to town until you meet with another engagement, I consent to accord your request"; & on the following day, pltf. asked deft. whether, "if he paid him up to Mar. 25, he intended going to town & remaining there till he got another engagement," to which deft. answered that he did; whereupon pltf. said—"on these conditions, I am prepared to pay your salary, at once up to Lady Day; but, if you remain in Amersham, I shall expect your services," & accordingly paid him the full quarter's salary. Deft. went to London, but shortly afterwards, & before Lady Day, returned to Amersham at the request of a client of pltf.'s, in whose employ he remained, giving professional advice:—Held: there was no evidence of a contract on the part of deft. to go to London & remain there, or to forbear to give his services in Amersham to any person other than pltf., or to render service to pltf. if he should return to Amersham.—DANIELS v. CHARLESLEY (1851), 11 C. B. 739; Cox, M. & H. 535; 21 L. J. C. P. 37; 18 L. T. O. S. 122; 16 J. P. 168; 138 E. R. 665.

733. — Covenant not to act for clients after expiration of articles—Acting as agent for country solicitors—Firm agent during prescribed period.]—Country solrs. held to be "clients" of their London agent within the meaning of a covenant by an articulated clerk not to transact business with persons who should be clients of his master's firm during the period of the articles.—REID v. BURROWS, [1892] 2 Ch. 413; 61 L. J. Ch. 448; 67 L. T. 183; 40 W. R. 620; 8 T. L. R. 538; 36 Sol. Jo. 490.

734. — Communication with persons within prohibited area—Letter posted outside.]—By an agreement made between pltf. & deft. the latter covenanted that he would not within a certain district do for other persons any work or act usually done by solrs. He wrote & posted letters outside the prohibited area addressed to persons residing within the area. These letters were solr.'s letters written on behalf of clients, & contained demands for an apology & for payment of a debt, & other matters. The instructions for the letters were given outside the area:—Held: the acts were done at the places where the letters were received, & therefore they were breaches of the covenant. In that case [Edmundson v. Render] deft. had covenanted not to "do any work or act . . . usually done by solrs." within a certain area. He had written letters to persons at addresses within the prohibited area to demand an apology for a slander & to collect a debt with his (deft.'s) charges as a solr. & other similar letters. The point for decision was whether this amounted to doing those acts within the district.

I held that it did. . . . I seem to have used the words, "He has acted as a solr. within the district." I think that my meaning would have been more accurately expressed thus: "He has within the district done an act usually done by a solr." (BUCKLEY, L. J.)—EDMUNDSON v. RENDER, [1905] 2 Ch. 320; 74 L. J. Ch. 585; 93 L. T. 124; 53 W. R. 632; 49 Sol. Jo. 620.

735. ——.]—Deft., an admitted solr., signed an agreement of service with *pltf.*s, a firm of solrs. carrying on business in London & at Brentford, whereby, in consideration of their employing him as their conveyancing clerk & representative advocate at Brentford at a stated salary, deft. undertook that he would not, at any time during his employment, or after the determination thereof, "carry on within a radius of five miles of the town hall, Brentford, the profession of a solr." After the termination of the engagement deft., who had started business as a solr. in London, wrote from his office in London, on behalf of a client residing within the prescribed radius, to a person also residing within the radius, demanding payment of a debt due to his client. The recipient of the letter, who was not in fact the debtor, as the result of the correspondence which ensued, bought up the debt, & deft., who acted as solr. for both parties, received a payment for his services. Upon motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain deft. from infringing the restrictive condition:—Held: there had been no breach of the agreement & an injunction ought not to be granted.—WOODBIDGE & SONS v. BELLAMY, [1911] 1 Ch. 326; 80 L. J. Ch. 265; 103 L. T. 852; 55 Sol. Jo. 204, C. A.

736. ——.]—Deft. had entered the employment of pltf., a solr., under an agreement which prohibited him from practising or acting as a solr., solr.'s clerk, or conveyancer within a certain area during, & for a certain time after leaving, the employment. Deft., after the employment was determined, did one act which was the act of a solr. within the area, & wrote several solr.'s letters to persons within the area:—Held: the covenant must be construed to mean substantially acting as a solr., & there had been no breach of the agreement, & an injunction ought not to be granted.—FREEMAN v. FOX (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 650.

737. — Actual presence—Presence in prohibited area not necessary.]—Deft. had bound himself to a solr. practising at M. by articles for a term, & covenanted that he would not at any time do any work or act for or on behalf of any persons usually done by solrs. within a radius of fifteen miles from M. without written permission. Deft. took proceedings to obtain probate of the will of a person within the prohibited radius, & corresponded from H. with a witness within the prohibited radius with a view to obtaining his evidence in order to enable probate to be obtained. He signed the præcipe directing a plaint note to be issued for a county ct. summons at a ct. in the prohibited area on behalf of a pltf. residing therein, & conducted the proceedings until receipt of the amount paid into ct. He prepared the will of a testatrix residing within the area on instructions received outside the area, & received a small fee therefor, but was present when she executed it within the area; & lastly, he advertised in a paper circulating within but published outside the area a farm for letting within the prohibited district. In an action to restrain deft. from practising within the prohibited limit:—Held: (1) the covenant might be broken although deft. or his clerks did not go professionally within such limit; therefore the proceedings in connection with the collection of the debt through the county ct. infringed the covenant; (2) also the acts done in relation to the execution of the will, which must be held to have been done by deft. in his character of a solr., constituted a breach of such covenant; (3) those as to advertising the farm did not break it.—EDMUNDSON v. RENDER (1904), 90 L. T. 814; 48 Sol. Jo. 560; subsequent proceedings, [1905] 2 Ch. 320.

745. — Covenant not to trade within ten miles—For three years. — Deft. was employed by pltf., a tailor in Regent street, as a cutter & fitter of wearing apparel. Deft. entered into an agreement with pltf., that, upon the termination of his employment for any cause, he would not carry on the business of a tailor within a circuit of 10 miles of Charing Cross for the period of three years from such termination of employment. Some time afterwards deft. left pltf.'s employment, & set up the business of a tailor & outfitter within about 200 yards of pltf.'s premises. An application for an injunction to restrain deft. having been made, the defence was raised that the restriction imposed by the agreement upon deft. was far in excess of what was required for the reasonable protection of pltf. in his business;

& that the agreement was therefore invalid on the ground that it was contrary to public policy, as being in unreasonable restraint of trade:—Held: the agreement was not unreasonable either in point of space or in point of time, for a tailor like pltf. to require deft. to enter into; therefore the agreement was not invalid; & pltf. was entitled to the injunction claimed.—NICOLL v. BEERE (1885), 53 L. T. 659; sub nom. NICHOLL v. BEERE, 2 T. L. R. 11.

749. What amounts to breach of agreement—Agreement not to carry on trade—Acting as foreman. — In consideration of A. paying a certain sum to B., B. assigned all his interest in business to A., & covenanted that he would not at any time carry on, or practice, or engage in, alone with any other person, the trade or business of a tailor, within the space of twenty miles from London. In another part of the deed, A. covenanted that B. should be employed as a cutter in business so long as business should be carried on, or so long as B. should diligently & faithfully attend to the business. Upon a bill by A., praying an injunction to restrain B. from carrying on the business of a tailor:—Held: (1) although that part of the agreement with reference to the employment of B. could not be enforced in this ct., yet, there being a good consideration for B.'s negative covenant, the ct. would enforce that part of the agreement; (2) also, that acting as the foreman of the business of a tailor was a violation of the agreement by B.—ROLFE v. ROLFE (1846), 15 Sim. 88; 1 Coop. temp. Cott. 87; 6 L. T. O. S. 518; 10 Jur. 61; 60 E. R. 550.

The deed contained a covenant by deft. not to carry on within ten years after the expiration of the term the business of an architect or surveyor within 10 miles of the town where the master resided. There was evidence that no architect in the town would accept as an apprentice a person who refused to enter into a similar restrictive covenant:—Held: (1) having regard

772. Grocer—Validity of restraint—Two miles—One year.]—Deft. was employed by pltf. co. as shop assistant in their branch shop at Southend under an agreement by which deft. agreed that he would not, for a period of two years subsequent to his leaving the employment, "establish, carry on, or be engaged in, or interested in . . . a business of a similar character to the business of the co. within the distance of two miles of any shop for the time being belonging to the co. at which he has been employed within the twelve months prior to his leaving their employ, nor solicit any of the customers of the co." Deft.'s duty was to serve at the grocery counter in pltf's. shop, although for a short time he canvassed for orders at the houses of pltf's. regular customers. Shortly after leaving pltf's. service, deft. entered the employment in the like capacity of another co., whose business was of a similar character to that carried on by pltf's., & whose shop was within two miles of pltf's. shop. In an action by pltf's. to restrain deft. from continuing in the service of this other firm in breach of the restrictive covenant entered into by him:—Held: deft. was "engaged" with the other firm within the meaning of that expression in the agreement, but, having regard to the nature of deft.'s employment, the restrictive covenant was not reasonably necessary for the protection of pltf's. business & therefore could not be enforced.

The nature of deft.'s employment . . . is described in the evidence as that of shop assistant . . . It is clear that he had no confidential duty to perform. . . . Evidence has been called to show that such a term was unusual in the case of shop assistants although common in the case of managers. Upon that evidence I conclude that in such a case the clause was not regarded as necessary (HAMILTON, J.).—PEARKS, LTD. v. CULLEN (1912), 28 T. L. R. 371.

h. Hardware—Validity of restraint—Five years.]—S. & H., trading as partners, sold out their business to E. under written agreement, as follows:—"S. & H. do hereby bind themselves to E. under a penalty of $2,000, that they will not do business in Chesley in hardware for the term of five years." Within the five years S. commenced a hardware business in Chesley, in connection with M.:—Held: this did not amount to a breach of the above agreement, though the matter was not free from doubt.—ELLIOTT v. STANLEY (1884), 7 O. R. 350.—CAN.

i. Tea & coffee agent.]—D., on entering the employment of W. as agent in the vending of teas & coffees, covenanted with W. not to engage in the sale or delivery of teas or coffees in the city of Toronto, either for himself or as agent for any other person, in the employ of pltf's. predecessors in business, who were hay & corn dealers, as salesman & manager of one of their branches, at a salary of 24s. per week, with the use of four living rooms over the shop.

In consideration of a small increase by way of commission in his salary, he undertook in the event of ceasing to represent his employers "not to enter into business for myself, or with others, or with any other firm within a radius of two miles from the shop in which I have been engaged."

The agreement was written out on the firm's business paper, which stated the nature of the business:—Held: the agreement must be construed with reference to the scope of the business, & not in a wide sense so as to render it void; although unlimited as to time it was not in the circumstances unreasonable; & pltf's. were entitled to an injunction restraining a breach.—HOOD & MOORE'S STORES, LTD. v. JONES (1899), 81 L. T. 169.

777. ——— United Kingdom & other countries—Valid as to United Kingdom.]—Pltf's., hay & straw merchants, at Brentford, who carried on an extensive wholesale & retail trade, in the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, & Canada, & had permanent places of business in the United Kingdom & France, in Oct. 1897, agreed to employ deft. as their clerk & foreman, in Calais or elsewhere, at a weekly wage of 35s. Deft. entered into a covenant that he would not, for the space of twelve months next after his leaving or being dismissed, carry on the business of a hay & straw merchant, or enter into the service of, or act as agent for, any person or persons carrying on the business of a hay & straw merchant, in the United Kingdom, or in France, or in the kingdom of Belgium, or Holland, or in the Dominion of Canada. Deft. continued in pltf's. employment until Nov. 1898, when he voluntarily left them, & entered into the employment of a rival hay & straw merchant in London:—Held: (1) the restraint imposed on deft. was not unreasonable, at any rate so far as the United Kingdom was concerned; (2) the covenant was not void on any ground of public policy; & deft. must be restrained from violating his covenant.

(3) The modern doctrine as I understand it, is that if an agreement restraining a person from carrying on business is injurious to the public interests of this country such agreement is invalid to the extent to which it is injurious, but not further, if it is so framed as to permit of division into two portions, one of which is good & the other bad . . . an agreement in restraint of trade which is wider than is reasonably necessary for the protection of the person seeking to enforce it is invalid so far as it is wider than is so necessary (LANDLEY, M.R.).

(4) The old rule of law that all covenants in restraint of trade are prima facie contrary to public for at least two years after leaving W.'s employ. W. moved for an injunction to restrain D., who had left her employ, from violating the above covenant:—Held: the covenant was binding upon D., notwithstanding that the consideration for it might have been inadequate.—WITCHER v. DARLING (1885), 9 O. R. 311.—CAN.

policy, & therefore void, has not been rescinded by recent decisions.

(5) If the restraint is unreasonable as to the foreign countries named, which I do not think it is, still the agreement as to them is clearly severable from that part of it which relates to this country (LINDLEY, M.R.).

(6) What may be reasonable on the sale of a business may be unreasonable on the departure of a man from the service of his employer (LINDLEY, M.R.).

(7) The old rule that a covenant in restraint of trade without limit in space within the United Kingdom is unreasonable, or prima facie unreasonable . . . is still, I believe, a rule to be followed (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

(8) The contract must be construed with reference to the business of *pltf.*s, which it was the object of the parties to protect (LINDLEY, M.R.).

(9) A covenant in restraint of trade, which is no wider than is reasonably required for the protection of the covenantee, will not be held void on any ground of public policy, unless some specific ground for so holding it void can be clearly established. But such cases are exceptional—UNDERWOOD (L.) & SON, LTD. v. BARKER, [1899] 1 Ch. 300; 68 L. J. Ch. 201; 80 L. T. 306; 47 W. R. 347; 15 T. L. R. 177; 43 Sol. Jo. 261, C. A.

(2) A covenant, on the purchase of the business of horse-hair manufacturers not to carry on the trade of horse-hair manufacturer, construed to prevent the covenantor from the buying & selling manufactured horse-hair.

(3) The cases lay down this principle: that if the nature of the trade require it, the extent excluded may be very great indeed, as in the case of solr. & attorney in which there are two cases which hold such a covenant is good, though it prohibits the business being carried on throughout all England (ROMILLY, M.R.).—HARMS v. At the time of the execution of the agreement deft. was a minor. After attaining twenty-one he continued in *pltf.*s' service for over four years, & his wages were raised from time to time. He left in Apr. 1892, & sought & obtained employment from persons who prior to that date were customers of *pltf.*s. — Held: it ought to be inferred from the conduct of the parties that a new contract between them, containing a stipulation by deft. in the terms of the agreement of Sept. 1886, not to seek employment or do work for former customers of *pltf.*s, had been entered into after deft. attained twenty-one, & an injunction ought to be granted to restrain the breach of such stipulation.—BROWN v. (2) In constructing the condition of such a bond, a ct. of law would take into consideration the surrounding circumstances at the time of executing the bond, & would consider the words "trading establishment" to mean an establishment for any trade likely to interfere with the goodwill, which was the subject of the sale.

During the specified period deft. became financially interested in two cos. which gave cinematograph entertainments within the area in question, & pltfs. brought an action against him for an injunction to restrain him from being interested therein:—Held: as a cinematograph theatre was a place of entertainment of an entirely different kind from a music hall, the action failed.—LONDON THEATRES OF VARIETIES, LTD. v. GIBBONS (1916), 33 T. L. R. 26.

793. Newspaper proprietor & reporter—Breach of agreement—Agreement not to print or publish sporting paper within certain area—Publication of

On the sale of Bell's Life in London the vendors agreed with the purchaser not to print or publish any sporting paper within 10 miles of a certain London street:—Held: the publication within this area of a paper containing no racing or betting odds, but merely recording such amateur sports as cricket, football, cycling, & running, was not a breach of the agreement.—*McFARLANE v. 798. — Breach of agreement—Manufacture & sale of margarine.]—Deft. had been a director of a limited co. formed for carrying on the general business of provision merchants. A substantial part of the profits of that co. was derived from the manufacture & sale of margarine by two subsidiary cos. On the amalgamation of that co. with pltf. co., who were carrying on the business of provision merchants, deft. entered into an agreement to become a director of pltf. co. for a period of five years, & that he would not at any time, solely or jointly, directly or indirectly carry on or be engaged or concerned or interested in the business of a "provision merchant" within a prohibited area, save on behalf of pltf. co. Deft., having ceased to be a director of pltf. co., threatened to carry on & be engaged, concerned & interested within the prohibited area in the exclusive business of manufacturing margarine & of selling the margarine so manufactured to wholesale or retail dealers therein. Pltf. company claimed an injunction to restrain deft. from so acting; & alternatively, to have the agreement rectified on certain grounds:—Held: (1) the manufacturing & selling by deft. of margarine would not be a breach of the agreement; & there was no ground for rectification thereof.

(2) It is irrelevant & improper to ask what the parties prior to this deed intended or understood similar to or in competition with the business carried on by the Winnipeg Garage Ltd. in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, for a period of five years from the above date. After the agreement, deft. acted as manager for another co. carrying on at Winnipeg the business of dealers in automobiles:—Held: the limitations imposed as to time & space were not unreasonable.—*KELLY v. Deft. agreed not "to open store" in Toronto; but, very soon after the sale & receipt of the purchase-price, which included £300 for the goodwill, deft. opened a grocery store in the neighbourhood of the store which he had sold; & to the deft.'s new store customers of the old were attracted. It was conceded that Ruthemians prefer to deal with people of their own race & usually do so:—Held: the protection which the restraint was designed to afford was not greater than

still at liberty to work for any of his friends who were refused to be trusted by A. & B.: by which construction the restraint on C. was only coextensive, as in reason it could only be intended to be, with the benefit to A. & B.; & therefore the restraint on C. could be no prejudice to public trade; (2) breaches assigned generally against C. for having made cordage for divers persons other than for Govt., & for employing other persons than A. & B. to make cordage for his friends, etc., were well assigned; though no particular persons were named, nor the quantities or kinds of cordage mentioned, etc.; such facts lying more particularly within C.'s knowledge.—*GALE v. Deft., having left pltfs.' employment, became managing director of Aerial Ropeway Transporters, Ltd., a co. which he was largely concerned in forming. In an action to restrain a breach of agreement:—Held: the part of the agreement as to acting with or as manager or agent for any person or co. interested in such business was too wide, & though that part was severable, yet, as pltfs. had no trade secrets which deft. was in a position to use in a similar business, & as there was in the circumstances no danger of solicitation of pltfs.' customers by deft. the action failed.—*ROPEWAYS, LTD. v. 822. —.—(1) F. H. & B. carried on the business of solrs. in partnership. A was afterwards admitted as a partner, & in 1838 F. retired; he reserved to himself the right of introducing T. as a partner in the firm. In 1846, H. B. & A. entered into new articles of partnership, the term of which was extended to 1853, & articles were inserted for the valuation & purchase of the share of any retiring or deceased partner during the term; these articles were made subject to the right reserved by F. of introducing T. In 1848 H. died, & his widow was paid the value of his share. In 1849 F. introduced T. as a partner. A memorandum was then drawn up, without reference to the articles of 1846, declaring that from Sept. 1850 T. should have one-fifth of the profits until Sept. 1853, from which date he was to take an equal share in the partnership profits; the partnership to continue for ten years from Sept. 1, 1850. A clause was afterwards, added, that in the event of the death or retirement of either of the senior partners before, Sept. 1, 1853, his two-fifths should be divided into thirds, two-thirds, to be taken by the surviving senior partner, & one-third by T. A., in connection with his signature to this memorandum, wrote that it was not to annul or prejudice the articles of 1846. In Aug. 1853, A. signified his intention of retiring from the business, & he claimed the value of his share of the partnership & of the goodwill. Upon a bill filed by A. to have the value of his share in the business & the goodwill thereof ascertained:—Held: A., by his notice, had dissolved the partnership; the two days intervening between the notice & the determination of the partnership under the articles of 1846, could give no marketable value to the goodwill in the business, & A. was only entitled to the profits during the continuance of the partnership.

(2) Where a trade is established in a particular place, the goodwill of that trade means nothing more than the sum of money which any person would be willing to give for the chance of being able to keep the trade connected with the place where it has been carried on. Goodwill is something distinct from the profits of a business, although in determining its value, the profits are necessarily taken into account, & it is usually estimated at so many years' purchase upon the amount of those profits. The term "goodwill" seems wholly inapplicable to the business of a solr., which has no local existence, but is entirely personal, depending upon the trust & confidence which persons may repose in his integrity & ability to conduct their legal affairs.

(3) No question arises in these cases on the adequacy of the consideration unless it is merely illusory, but solely whether the restraint is confined within reasonable limits of space or time (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—AUSTEN v. BOYS (1858), 2 De G. & J. 626; 27 L. J. Ch. 714; 31 L. T. O. S.

Nor is he at liberty in any other manner to hold out that he is carrying on business in continuation of or in succession to the business carried on by the late firm.

SECT. 2.—NATURE AND CHARACTERISTICS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PERSONAL AND LOCAL GOODWILL.

831. Personal & local goodwill distinguished.—There is no such abstract property as will bear the name of goodwill. In some cases there is a local goodwill, especially in the case of an inn; there is also a goodwill which is purely personal. It is said, that personal goodwill is not such a thing as could be considered the subject of sale. Then, suppose a goodwill was partly local & partly personal, that personal goodwill is in the individual bkpt., & not in the assignees; the personal goodwill is the power to recommend customers, but what would be the recommendation of the assignees? they could have no influence on the customers (SIR JOHN CROSS).—Re THOMAS, Ex p. THOMAS (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 294; 5 Jur. 967, Ct. of R.; on appeal (1842), 1 Ph. 159, L. C.

832. —.]—The trade or goodwill of a trade sometimes enhances the value of real property as a well accustomed tavern or shop will, on account of the habit of persons to frequent it, sell for much more & the duty on a conveyance of the place where the business is carried on ought pro tanto to be augmented; & very frequently the goodwill of a business or profession without any interest in land connected with it is made the subject of sale though there is nothing tangible in it; it is merely the advantage of the recommendation of the vendor to his connections & his agreeing to abstain from all competition with the vendor (POLLOCK, C.B.).—*POTTER v. 833. —.]—It is obvious there are certain kinds of goodwill to which a mtgee. will be entitled. The goodwill which attaches to a particular house increases the value of that house & therefore the mtgee. is entitled to that. If for instance there is a well known public house & from its position being well known people frequent it the goodwill attaches to the house & adds to its value. But there may be other kinds of goodwill attaching to the personal reputation which a man has made for himself. Of course that does not go to the mtgee. of the house but is a thing personal to the man whose skill & name have acquired that goodwill (COTTON, L.J.).—COOPER v. METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (1883), 25 Ch. D. 472; 53 L. J. Ch. 109; 50 L. T. 602; 32 W. R. 709, C. A.

Annotation.—Consd. West London Syndicate v. I. R. Comrs., [1898] 2 Q. B. 507.

834. Locality of goodwill.—(1) What is goodwill? It is a thing very easy to describe, very difficult to define. It is the benefit & advantage of the good name, reputation, & connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old established business from a new business at its first start (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

The term goodwill is nothing more than a summary of the rights accruing to resps. from their purchase of the business & property employed in it (LORD DAVEY).

(2) If there is one attribute common to all cases of goodwill it is the attribute of locality. For goodwill has no independent existence. It cannot subsist by itself. It must be attached to a business. Destroy the business, & the goodwill perishes with it, though elements remain which may perhaps be gathered up & be revived again (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

I do not say there may not be such a thing as a goodwill of a business utterly unconnected with the premises in which the business has been previously carried on, for it is quite possible that a man retiring from business might wish to retain the premises for his own private use, & sell merely the goodwill. . . . The goodwill of a trade carried on in a shop is as essential to the tradesman as the shop itself, which is benefited by it. What is the trade of a shop but the business done in it, & how is that custom brought to the shop but by the goodwill attached to it. The combination of a suitable shop with the trade done in it, & the

*Sect. 2.—Nature and characteristics: Sub-sects. 1 & 2.
Sect. 3: Sub-sects. 1 & 2, A. & B.; sub-sect. 3.]*

goodwill inducing that trade, seem to me to be inseparable (LORD BRAMPTON).

That in some cases & to some extent goodwill can & must be considered as having a distinct locality, is obvious, & was not in fact disputed. The goodwill of a public-house or of a retail shop is an instance. The goodwill of a business usually adds value to the land or house in which it is carried on if sold with the business; & so far as the goodwill adds value to land or buildings, the goodwill can only be regarded as situate where they are. In such a case the goodwill is said to be annexed to them (LORD LINDLEY).

(3) It has not been contended that goods, wares, & merchandise cover goodwill (LORD LINDLEY).—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. MULLER & CO.'S MARGARINE, LTD., [1901] A. C. 217; 70 L. J. K. B. 677; 84 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—GOODWILL AS SEPARATE ENTITY.

835. Whether separable from business.]—(1) The goodwill of a victualler's business held, under the circumstances, to be incident to the stock & license, & not to the premises on which the business was carried on.

(2) A widow carried on the business of a licensed victualler on premises held by her from year to year. Prior to her second marriage, she assigned her household goods, furniture, stock-in-trade, brewing utensils, & all other her effects upon trusts excluding her husband. She married:—Held: the goodwill of the trade, which was afterwards sold, passed by the deed as incident to the stock & license, & not to the husband with the premises.

(3) It [goodwill] is the chance or probability that custom will be had at a certain place of business in consequence of the way in which that business had been previously carried on (LORD LONGDALE, M.R.).—ENGLAND v. DOWNS (1842), 6 Beav. 269; 12 L. J. Ch. 85; 6 Jur. 1075; 49 T. R. 820.

836. —.]—The widow & one of the two exors. of a surgeon dentist, who alone proved his will very shortly after his decease, by the description of the widow & one of the exors. of the deceased, entered into an agreement with a person as his successor, who agreed to give to the widow, her exors., administrators & assigns £100 yearly for five years, for the goodwill of the business, & for the advantage of an introduction to the patients of the deceased, to pay £100 for the instruments, to take the furniture at a valuation, & to take the house which the deceased held as a yearly tenant, & in which he resided, for the residue of the term therein. The agreement contained stipulations for the personal exertions of the widow on behalf of the successor. Upon inquiries before the master in a creditors' suit against the widow for the administration of testator's estate, it appeared by the affidavit of the successor that he relied upon the widow's personal exertions; & that, if these were not afforded, he should resist payment of the annuity. By the report the master did not charge her with the annuity of £100 as part of her testator's assets; but, on exceptions:—Held: the whole, or a part, of the annuity belonged to the estate; & the cause was referred back to the master to review his report.—*SMALE v. The vendor was to show a good title to the lease & to assign the lease & goodwill to the purchasers; in the event of the consent of the landlords to the assignment of the lease not being obtained, it was provided that the vendor should, at the option of the purchasers, execute a declaration of trust of the leasehold premises in their favour. The consent of the landlords not having been obtained, a declaration of trust was executed in favour of the purchasers, which was stamped with the fixed duty of 10s.:—Held: the goodwill was not merely an enhancement of the value of the leasehold premises but was capable of being sold independently thereof, & as it was property other than lands, the agreement was liable to ad valorem duty in respect of the value of the goodwill.

Upon the dissolution of the partnership the bkpt. retained the assets & goodwill of the business in England & America, while his brother continued to carry it on in France. The formulas had never been committed to writing. The bkpt. refused to disclose them on the ground that they existed only in his brain as the result of his skill & capacity, & that to disclose them would be a breach of his agreement with his brother:—Held: the formulas were part of the goodwill & assets of his business, & he was bound to communicate them to his trustee.—Re KEENE, [1922] 2 Ch. 475; 91 L. 872. —.]—The rule of Labouchere v. Dawson, No. 866, ante, by which in the case of a voluntary sale the vendor of the goodwill of a business is precluded from afterwards soliciting the former customers of that business cannot be extended to the case of a compulsory alienation. The obligation enforced by the rule is purely personal & is not a mere incident to the transfer of property. Therefore the purchaser of the goodwill of a business from a trustee in bkpcy. or liquidation has no right to restrain the bkpt. or liquidating debtor from setting up bona fide a fresh business & soliciting the customers of his former business & it is immaterial whether bkpt. has or has not joined in the conveyance of the goodwill to the purchaser.

An assignment of a business & its goodwill, without more, . . . as against the assignor . . . confers on the assignee the exclusive right to carry on the business assigned & as incidental to this it also confers on him the exclusive right to represent himself as carrying on that business & consequently the right not only to sue the assignor for damages if he has infringed these rights but also to restrain him from infringing them if he manifests an intention to infringe them (per CUR.).—*WALKER v. He has no right to call his house O. house. That I take to be a mode of representing his business as the same as was carried on there. It is the trade designation of the business—it is the O. house business. I think that a man who has sold the house which is known as O. house & the business which is known as the O. house business has no right to reassume that name which can only be reassumed for the purpose of deceiving the public into the belief that his present business is the same as his former one (JONES, V.C.).—*HUDSON v. trustees assigned the business to another son, B. G. May. Harry May, then commenced under the name of "N. & co." a similar business on premises near to B. G. May's place of business, & issued catalogues closely resembling those that had been used in his father's business. In the catalogues he described himself as "Harry May, eldest son of Henry May," & stated that the business had been established in 1802. An action was commenced in the county ct. by B. G. May against Harry May, & an interlocutory injunction was granted to restrain deft. from using, in connection with his business, the names of "H. May," "Harry" or "Henry May." On appeal to the Div. Ct. the injunction was dissolved. At the trial it was held that actual deception had occurred, & that deft. had solicited the customers of his father's business. An injunction was granted to restrain deft. from using the above-mentioned names, without adding a statement that his business had no connection with the business of Henry May. Deft. appealed:—Held: deft. had wrongfully represented himself as continuing to carry on the business that had been assigned to pltf.—MAY v. MAY (1914), 31 R. P. C. 325, D. C.

(2) The goodwill of the business would be an asset, & might well be the most valuable asset of the partnership. In such a case the alienation being involuntary as in the case of a bkpcy. the exception established in Walker v. Mottram, No. 872, ante, applies, & debtor is not precluded from soliciting the customers of his old firm.—GREEN & SONS (NORTHAMPTON), LTD. v. MORRIS, [1914] 1 Ch. 562; 83 L. J. Ch. 559; 110 L. In such a case, therefore, debtor cannot be restrained from canvassing the customers, nor can a third person be restrained from instigating debtor to do so.—FAREY v. COOPER, [1927] 2 K. It was provided that nothing in the agreement should prevent James P. from carrying on the like business where he should think fit, & under the name of James P. T. 900. —[—]—Old customers dealing with vendor—Subsequent solicitation.—The goodwill of a business was sold to the C. Co. W., one of the vendors, who had been a partner in the business, subsequently formed the N. Co., which competed with the C. Co. W., on behalf of the N. Co., solicited custom from persons who had been customers of the original business :—Held : the rule which prohibits the vendor from soliciting customers applies when the customers, although remaining customers of the purchaser, have in fact become customers of the new firm started by the vendor. It is immaterial whether a particular individual who is solicited has also of his own accord done business with the vendor.—CURL BROTHERS, LTD. v. WEBSTER, [1904] 1 Ch. 685; 73 L. J. Ch. 540; 90 L. 901. —[—]—Application to vendor's executors.—The rule laid down in *Trego v. Where therefore a deed of partnership provided that on the death of a partner the surviving partner should acquire deceased partner's share of the capital property & assets of the partnership business, or alternatively that the surviving partner might elect to have the whole of the assets of the partnership realised & divided, an injunction was granted at the instance of the surviving partner to restrain an exor. of deceased partner from soliciting customers of the firm.—*BOORNE v. contract not to deal with any customers of the old business the goodwill of which was sold? In my opinion not. Here the parties were dealing with that upon which the law had put a definite & fixed interpretation. It was well known what a sale of good will implied &—although many cases have dealt with the effect of a sale of goodwill no case has ever laid down that a man who had sold his goodwill although he set up a shop next door was not justified in dealing with the customers of the old firm whom he did not solicit to come there (COTTON, L.J.).

(3) Undoubtedly the cases have established that the sale of a goodwill does prevent a man from representing that he is carrying on the old business, or that he is the successor of it & in that way trying to get the customers of the partnership (COTTON, L.J.).—LEGGOTT v. The premiums asked for the practice & for the lease were stated in a letter from the agent to deft., but no time for completing the purchase was mentioned. Deft. replied in a letter to the agent accepting the terms offered, & adding that he should be ready to pay the deposit money "on receipt of corrected agreement," & at the same time he wrote to pltf. personally, also accepting the terms offered & adding, "I shall trust to you to give me the best introduction you can during three months & afterwards, if necessary." Pltf.

replied, thanking deft. for acceding to his terms & saying that "it would be his aim as well as his duty to give him an effectual introduction to his patients." A formal agreement was drawn up but never signed, & after some further correspondence deft. refused to complete the purchase:—Held: inasmuch as the time for the commencement of the purchase was left uncertain, & the stipulation as to the three months' introduction was not agreed to, & as the parties contemplated a formal agreement, there was no binding contract between the parties, & the action was dismissed.

912. Provision for reference of disputes to arbitration—Stay of action pending reference.]—Defts. by an agreement in writing contracted with pltf. for the sale to him of their business of the manufacture & sale of certain electric batteries. The agreement, by clause 5, was expressed to be subject to the following condition, that "the tests which are now being carried out by or on behalf of the purchaser prove to his reasonable satisfaction that the Alkum electric batteries now being made by the vendors are capable of fulfilling the claims made by them." By clause 12 it was provided that, if any dispute should arise between the parties as to the agreement or any clause, matter or thing therein contained or the intention or construction thereof or in any wise relating thereto, the same should be referred to two persons therein named as arbitrators under the Arbitration Act, 1889. Part of the purchase-money was, in pursuance of the agreement, paid by pltf. by way of deposit. Pltf. however refused to complete the purchase, alleging that in consequence of the non-fulfilment of the condition he was no longer bound by the agreement. Defts. insisted that the condition was satisfied & gave notice of the pending dispute to the arbitrators & requested them to proceed with the reference; pltf. issued a writ claiming a declaration that the agreement was determined & no longer binding on the parties & repayment of the deposit. Defts. thereupon issued a summons asking for a stay of the proceedings in the action pursuant to s. 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49):—Held: if the condition were in fact not fulfilled, pltf.'s obligation under the contract came to an end in accordance with the terms expressed in the contract itself & not by reason of the occurrence of an event dehors the consideration of the contracting parties, & therefore, the agreement to refer the dispute, which was one within the meaning of it, to arbn. was still binding between the parties & the action must be stayed.—DE LA GARDE v. WORSNUP, [1928] Ch. 17; 96 L. J. Ch. 446; 137 L. T. 475; 71 Sol. Jo. 604.

917. —.]—In 1877 the three partners in a firm of solrs. agreed that the partnership should be dissolved, that two of them should continue to carry on the partnership business, & should employ the third as a clerk at a salary, & that all the books, papers & other property of the firm should vest in & be the property of the two continuing partners. The third partner died shortly afterwards, & in an action by his administratrix against the two continuing partners, an order was made directing the partnership accounts to be taken as from Jan. 1874. In taking the accounts, pltf. claimed that a sum should be allowed in respect of the interest of deceased partner in the "goodwill" of the partnership business, which was put at £10,000, being five years' purchase of the estimated annual profits of the business:—Held: under the circumstances no sum could be allowed in respect of the alleged "goodwill" of the business.

As a general rule, & in the absence of express contract, there is not, in a partnership between solrs., any partnership asset which is capable of being sold or valued as the "goodwill" of the partnership business.—*ARUNDELL v. A. & B. carried on business in partnership on premises belonging to the firm. A. died, having bequeathed his goodwill, not including the book debts or stock-in-trade, to pltf. The exors. assented to the bequest, but had assigned testator's interest in the trade premises to the surviving partner. To a bill by pltf. against the surviving partner to realise his share of the goodwill, a general demurrer was allowed.—ROBERTSON v. QUIDDINGTON (1860), 28 Beav. 529; 54 E. R. 469.

922. Allowance for goodwill.—To retiring partner—No provision in articles.]—Claim of retiring partner to a share in the value of the goodwill of the business disallowed.

Two persons entered into partnership for twenty-one years, but in consequence of disagreements & misconduct, disputes ensued. The partnership was dissolved by decree, one consenting to retire & the other to take the stock & effects at a valuation:—Held: the retiring partner was not entitled to any allowance for his share of the goodwill, no provision being made by the partnership articles for such an allowance on a dissolution by death or by the retirement of one partner by notice during the term.—HALL v. HALL (1855), 20 Beav. 139; 52 E. R. 555.

Sect. 4.—Valuation: Sub-sect. 1, A., B. & C.]

923. ————].—A. & B. carried on the business of chemists upon leasehold premises belonging to A. By the partnership articles, upon A.'s retirement B. was to have the right of purchasing the premises at a valuation:—Held: the premises were to be valued irrespective of the advantages to be derived from the fact, that the business of chemist had been carried on there for thirty years.—BURFIELD v. ROUCH (1862), 31 Beav. 241; 54 E. R. 1130.

925. ————].—On a dissolution of a partnership the expelled partner was entitled to be paid for his share in "the stock-in-trade, credits, property, & effects of the business." In the valuation made, nothing was awarded to him for the goodwill:—Held: as the terms of the partnership were silent as to the goodwill, it had been properly omitted in the valuation.—CHAPMAN v. HAYMAN (1885), 1 T. L. R. 397.

926. ————].—Inconsistent provisions in articles.—Articles of partnership executed in 1864 contained a provision that, as soon as possible after Apr. 30 in each year, a full & general account should be taken by the partners of the stock, etc., & other the estate & effects of the partnership, & that a fair valuation & appraisalment should be made of all the particulars which might be in their nature susceptible of valuation. It was also provided that the accounts of a partner ceasing to be a partner should be adjusted by payment to such partner of the sum which should appear to his credit, after the same should have been adjusted under the provisions thereinbefore contained.

On Apr. 30, 1875, deft., who were co-partners with pltf., being dissatisfied with his conduct, served on him a notice dated Apr. 28, that the partnership would, as regarded him, be dissolved as & from Oct. 31 then next. After this pltf. was treated as a stranger. The account up to Apr. 30, 1875, was made up without his being consulted, & in the valuation of the property the goodwill of the business was not included. It was held in the ct. below that, in determining what pltf. was entitled to receive on his exclusion from the partnership, the value of his share of the goodwill ought to be taken into account:—Held: prima facie the goodwill ought not to be included in the valuation, & the articles contained nothing to show that it was intended to include it.

The words "susceptible of valuation" in the articles, meant susceptible in the ordinary way adopted by commission merchants. Goodwill, in such cases, was never sold alone, & was not in its nature susceptible of valuation.—STEUART v. GLADSTONE (1879), 10 Ch. D. 626; 40 L. T. 145; 27 W. R. 512, C. A.

After the decease of one of two partners in a bank, the survivor sold the business for £10,000:—Held: the estate of the deceased was entitled to a share of so much of the £10,000 as was attributable to the goodwill, & special inquiries were directed to ascertain the value, having regard to the fact, first, that the partnership premises belonged to the survivor, secondly, that he had still the right to carry on the same business in the same locality, & thirdly, that the sole right of issuing notes, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, belonged to him.

934. —[It is now settled that goodwill is ordinarily a distinct part of the property of a trading partnership, & therefore under a provision in partnership articles for valuation of the partnership, property & effects at its close, the goodwill is a matter of valuation.

But having regard to the fact that each of the partners will hereafter be at liberty to set up & carry on the same business as that carried on by the firm. Such valuation will not include anything in respect of debts, being at liberty to carry on the business at the same place (HALL, V.-C.).—REYNOLDS v. BULLOCK (1878), 47 L. J. Ch. 773; 39 L. 942. — Express provision in articles — That goodwill should belong to partners.]—By articles of partnership between two persons, it was provided that "the goodwill of the business should belong to the partners in the same proportions as those in which they were respectively entitled to the capital of the partnership; but the value of the goodwill should not be taken into account in any of the accounts between the partners as between the partnership & either of the partners"; & that "on the determination of the partnership, at whatever time & by whatever means, a general account & valuation of all the property, effects & liabilities of the partnership should be made up & settled by & between, as the case might be, the partners, or the surviving partners, & the exors.

or administrators of the deceased partners, or the respective exors. or administrators of the deceased partners; & their respective claims or shares & interests in the partnership & the property & effects thereof should be ascertained." One of the partners died during the period of the partnership, whereupon the partnership determined:—Held: upon the construction of the articles, in the general account & valuation directed to be taken on the determination of the partnership the value of the goodwill was to be estimated.—WADE v. JENKINS (1860), 2 Giff. 509; 30 L. J. Ch. 633; 3 L. T. 464; 7 Jur. N. S. 39; 66 E. R. 214.

943. — Share of deceased partner to be taken at value in last balance sheet—Goodwill not brought in to balance sheet.]—One partner died while negotiations were pending for the sale of business premises to a railway co. By the partnership deed the share of a deceased partner was to be taken at the value put upon it by the last balance sheet, & in the past balance sheets there was no mention of goodwill:—Held: in taking the accounts the deceased partner must be credited with a share of the premises, plant, etc., at the price subsequently paid for them by the railway co., but his estate was not entitled to any share of the sum paid for goodwill.—HUNTER v. DOWLING, [1895] 2 Ch. 223; 61 L. J. Ch. 713; 72 L. T. 653; 43 W. R. 619; 13 R. 474.

944. —[—Articles of partnership provided that a full & general annual account & valuation of all the capital, stock-in-trade, property, profits, moneys, credits, & effects whatsoever of the partnership should be made, & that if a partner should die before the expiration of the partnership his exors., administrators, & assigns should be entitled to such sum of money as his share of the capital & property of the partnership should upon the last general annual account amount to.

A partner died during the continuance of the partnership, & his exors. claimed that in ascertaining the amount of his share they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill of the partnership business, which was of considerable value, included in the account & valuation.

The articles contained no express provision as to the goodwill.

On a summons taken out to determine whether they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill included:—Held: there was no material difference between the present case & Stewart v. Gladstone, No. 926, ante, & the principle of that decision being that, where the accounts from which the sum to be paid is to be ascertained are accounts for the purpose of ascertaining profits, the goodwill is not to be included, a sum for the goodwill ought not to be included in the account.—SCOTT v. SCOTT (1903), 89 L. T. 582.

945. — "Then employed or used in carrying on the said business."—Two persons agreed to carry on the business of a brewery for twenty-one years under partnership articles, which provided that, on the death of a partner without nominating a son to succeed him, which event happened, "the property, stock, goods, & effects of the said partnership" were to be valued, & the surviving partner was to have the option to purchase at such valuation.

The articles further provided that immediately on the determination of the partnership by any of the contingencies mentioned in the articles the partners should join in making up a final account of all the property, joint stock, money, goods, & effects, belonging to the partnership, & that after such account should have been so made up "the property, stock, goods, & effects then employed or used in carrying on the said business" would be valued as therein mentioned.

The partnership was continued upon the same articles by a deed of covenant for a further period of seven years & afterwards without any written or verbal agreement. One partner died, & the surviving partner exercised his option to purchase the business at the valuation:—Held: although the articles said nothing about goodwill in terms, yet the words "then employed or used in carrying on the said business" could not be construed in so narrow a way as to exclude the goodwill in valuing the business; & therefore the goodwill must be valued separately, & the exors. of the deceased partner were entitled to a share of profits down to the date of the valuation.—PAGE v. RATLIFF (1897), 76 L. T. 63, C. A.

946. —Express exclusion of goodwill.]—By a clause in articles of partnership executed in 1878 between two brothers it was provided that on the death of either the survivor should pay to the exors. of the deceased the full share to which they should be entitled on the taking of a general account in writing of the partnership assets, "such stock & other assets as shall not consist of money to be valued either by mutual agreement or valuation in the usual way nothing being charged for goodwill."

One brother died in 1886, & the survivor as sole exor. under his will effected the valuation as directed, paid for the share as surviving partner, & thenceforth carried on the business on his own account.

In an action brought in 1908 by the residuary legatees under the said will against the surviving partner in effect for an account on the footing that there had been no operative sale & purchase in 1886 by reason of the valuation then made not being in manner authorised by the clause, & that the business must be deemed to have been carried on for the benefit of both parties to the suit:—Held: on the true construction of the clause there was a binding contract of sale & purchase, & the valuation was only an incident in carrying out the same. The evidence showed that a substantially accurate method had been adopted, but even if error has been shown either in the method or the results it could not destroy the contract, but would fall to be corrected by the ct. on being clearly & conclusively proved. The price of goodwill must in any event be excluded from the valuation, & applts. could not rely exclusively on the dual character of deft. which had been imposed upon him by their own testator.—HORDERN v. HORDERN, [1910] A. C. 465; 80 L. J. P. C. 15; 102 L. T. 867; 26 T. L. R. 524, P. C.

947. Time of valuation—At date of death.]—B., the surviving partner in a business, being also the exor. of the deceased partner, carried on for eight years the business, which was insolvent at the death of the deceased partner, & then sold the business for £1,700. In a suit for the administration of the deceased partner's estate against B., as exor. :—Held: the value of the goodwill ought to be ascertained at the time of the deceased partner's death, & not at the time of sale.—BROUGHTON v. BROUGHTON (1875), 44 L. J. Ch. 526; 23 W. R. 770.

949. Mode of valuation.]—In Aug. 1845, deft.'s testatrix granted to pltf. a lease of a public-house in London Road, Liverpool, for fourteen years, at a rent of £70 per annum, the latter paying £300 for the goodwill; & before the expiration of that lease, viz. in Mar. 1858, she granted him a further lease for fourteen years at a rent of £80 per annum. Each of these leases contained the following proviso: "Provided also, & it is agreed & declared that, at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term hereby granted, all such sum & sums of money as shall or can be procured for the goodwill of the business of a licensed victualler in respect of the premises from an incoming tenant, shall be received by & belong to the lessee, his exors., etc."

The second lease being about to expire, negotiations took place between pltf. & deft. for a renewal, but they failed to come to terms; & deft., with notice of pltf.'s claim under the above proviso, granted a lease of the premises to a new tenant for a term of fourteen years, at a rent of £160 per annum, & a premium of £1,300.

Upon a case stated for the opinion of the ct. by an arbitrator, to whom it was to be referred to assess the amount of damages pltf. was entitled to recover for the breach, if any, of the above proviso, upon the principles to be laid down by the ct., it was found as a fact that "the rental of £160 per annum reserved in the lease granted to the new tenant was, without any premium, bonus, or other payment whatever, a full & sufficient rental for the premises under such a lease whether intended for a licensed victualler's business or not"; & further, that "the goodwill of the business carried on by pltf. would, if belonging to the owner of the house, have had a very considerable value, & if such owner had in that case been willing to grant a lease similar to that granted to the new tenant, a sum exceeding £1,300 would without difficulty have been obtained for the goodwill":—Held: the proviso was broken; & the arbitrator was to estimate the damages pltf. was entitled to recover for such breach, in the same manner as one accustomed to value "goodwill" as between outgoing & incoming tenant would estimate them, & in so doing was not to disregard the increased value of the property in the neighbourhood generally.—*LEWELLYN v. Part VII.—Trade Unions.

NOTE.—In this Part Trade Union Act, 1871 (c. 31); Conspiracy & Protection of Property Act, 1875 (c. 86); Trade Union Act (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 22); Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (c. 47); Trade Union Act, 1913 (c. 30); & Trade Disputes & Trade Unions Act, 1927 (c. 22), are referred to as 1871 Act, 1875 Act, 1876 Act, 1906 Act, 1913 Act, & 1927 Act respectively.

SECT. 1.—DEFINITIONS.

Statutory definition.—See 1913 Act, ss. 1, 2.

950. Combination for regulating relations—Between workmen & masters.—(1) Where the general objects of a society are legal, as in the case of a provident society the object of which is the relief of members when disabled by age or accident or when out of employment, the fact that some of its rules are illegal as being in restraint of trade does not constitute the society an illegal society, or prevent a member from recovering a sum of money payable to him under a rule of the society which is not illegal.

(2) Rules made for the bonâ fide purpose of protecting the funds of such a society from claims, which may be avoided, are not illegal because they are incidentally to some extent in restraint of trade, provided that their provisions go no further than is reasonable & necessary for that purpose.

(3) . . . "Trade union" means any combination for regulating the relations between workmen & masters, or between workmen & workmen, or between masters & masters, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business . . . the society [a friendly society] is a trade union within the definition clause (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(4) The general proposition, that every society which has rules in restraint of trade is unlawful, i.e. criminal, & that its members are punishable at common law was denied by the ct. in R. v. Stainer, No. 1153, post, & cannot be supported (LINDLEY, L.J.).—SWAINE v. WILSON (1889). 24 Q. B. D. 252; 59 L. J. Q. B. 78; 62 L. T. 309; 54 J. P. 484; 38 W. R. 261; 6 T. L. R. 121, C. A.

954. ——Pltfs. were manufacturers of "cased tubes," & were members of a trade combination called the Cased Tube assocn., & depts., who were also manufacturers of cased tubes, consisted of all the other members of the assocn. The object of the assocn. was the regulation of prices in the trade, & in furtherance of that object it was provided by the rules that each member should be restricted in his output of cased tubes to a certain fixed percentage of the total output of the members, the percentage being based on the member's actual output in preceding years. Each member whose output in any month exceeded his percentage was required to pay the profits of such excess into a "pool," while each member whose output in any month was less than his percentage was entitled to receive a certain sum out of the pool. The rules provided that the members should sell their cased tubes only upon the terms & at the prices which should from time to time be fixed by the assocn. No means was provided by which a person who had once joined the assocn. could terminate his membership. By an agreement made between pltfs., depts., & certain firms, pltfs., in consideration of depts. fixing their percentage at a certain figure, agreed not to sell their cased tubes to any persons other than the said firms, who on their part agreed not to purchase any cased tubes from manufacturers other than the members of the assocn. The agreement provided that it should continue in force as long as the assocn. & a certain other society, over whom pltfs. had no authority, continued to control prices. For several months pltfs.' output was less than their percentage, & they became entitled to receive from the assocn. sums of money out of the pool, & the secretary of the assocn. furnished them each month with an account showing how much they were entitled to for that month. In an action brought to recover the money so due:—Held: (1) the restraint of trade imposed by the agreement & the rules was unreasonable as between the parties, & therefore the agreement was invalid at common law, & pltfs. could not recover thereon; (2) the assocn. was a "trade union" within the definition in 1876 Act, s. 16, & therefore under 1871 Act, ss. 3 & 4, the agreement was not void; & though the agreement could not be directly enforced, the debts created under it could form the foundation for an account stated, & pltfs. were entitled to recover on the accounts stated.—EVANS (JOSEPH) & Co. v. HEATHCOTE, [1918] 1 K. B. 418; 87 L. J. K. B. 593; 118 L. T. 556; 34 T. L. R. 247, C. A.

955. Friendly society.—SWAINE v. WILSON, No. 950, ante.

956. Whether trade union a corporation.—(1) A trade union registered under Trade Union Acts, can, by virtue of the provisions of 1871 Act, s. 7, but not otherwise, acquire & hold land.

(2) The word "purchase" in 1871 Act, s. 7, is used in its ordinary sense of "buy for money"; not in the technical legal sense of "acquire otherwise than by descent or escheat," & consequently a devise of land by will to such a society is invalid.

The mere fact that in its memorandum & arts. of assocn. a co. has power to enter into an arrangement for the regulation of the output of, & the price to be obtained for, goods, this not being one of the main objects of the co., does not constitute the co. a trade union, & as such incapable of registration under Companies Acts.—*BRITISH ASSOCN. SECT. 2.—LEGALITY.SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

962. Common law legality.]—Pitf., being a member of & in receipt of sick pay from deft. society, was subjected to a deduction of 2s. 6d. from his sick pay for breach of the rules of the society. He thereupon brought an action in the county ct. for a declaration to the effect that he had not broken the rules & for the return of the 2s. 6d. as having been improperly deducted. It appeared that deft. society was registered under 1871 & 1876 Acts as a trade union, & that its rules provided for raising funds to secure to the members the benefits of a superannuation fund, a sick fund, a funeral fund, a travelling fund, & a trade fund. Rule 1 stated that the society was "a trade union." By r. 7, clause 2, s. 4, "Should work be offered at the current rate of wages to any member receiving travelling relief, unless it be to fill the place of those fighting for better conditions, & he refuses to accept it, his allowance shall be at once stopped, & his card given up."

By r. 40, s. 1, members paying to the trade fund were to be entitled to dispute pay, travelling relief, & assistance to sue employers under Employers' Liability & Workmen's Compensation Acts. Sect. 2 was as follows: "Strike pay will only be paid in support of members endeavouring to secure an advance of wages or resisting a reduction of same, resisting an increase of the hours of labour, & when desirable, endeavouring to secure a reduction of same." By sect. 4, "Should a strike take place, all members who are entitled to trade benefit under this rule shall receive pay at the rate of 1s. 8d. per day for each working day, not to exceed six weeks. If the strike continue, the executive committee shall be empowered to continue pay for a longer period, if they, upon consideration, deem it necessary. . . ."

By sect. 6, "No officer or member of this society shall be authorised or permitted to take any active interest in, aid in any way, or otherwise assist [any trade movement except in his private capacity. . . ."

The judge held that the society was a trade union, that its objects were in restraint of trade & illegal at common law, & that therefore he was precluded by 1871 Act, s. 4, from entertaining the claim:—Held: there was jurisdiction to entertain the claim, for the objects of the society were not illegal, & the rules amounted to no more than an insurance of the members against the consequences of a strike.

It is a common mistake to suppose that every trade union is, apart from the Act of 1871, an unlawful combination (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—GOZNEY v. BRISTOL TRADE & PROVIDENT SOCIETY, [1909] 1 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—LEGAL AND ILLEGAL COMBINATIONS.

A. In General.

See 1913 Act, Sect. 2 (2), (3).

968. Evidence of legality.—By rules of union—Rules cloak to shield illegal objects.]—(1) If the printed rules are not the real rules of the assocn. & if the society under the pretence of being a benevolent institution is really a scheme in whole or in part designed for the encouragement & support of illegal strikes, the society must be deemed to be established for an illegal purpose (HANNEN, J.).

(2) A strike is properly defined as "a simultaneous cessation of work on the part of the workmen"; & its legality or illegality must depend on the means by which it is enforced & on its objects. It may be criminal, as if it be part of a combination for the purpose of injuring or molesting masters or men: or it may be simply illegal, as if it be the result of an agreement depriving those engaged in it of their liberty of action . . . or it may be perfectly innocent, as if it be the result of the voluntary combination of the men for the purpose only of benefiting themselves by raising their wages (HANNEN, J.).

(3) The question whether a society has been established for illegal purposes or not, ought, as I think with rare exceptions, to be decided by the rules themselves. . . . To explain & interpret these rules by vague general evidence of what may be sometimes done is, I think, objectionable. . . . I admit that cases may arise where a society may intentionally be established for illegal purposes, but may studiously keep such purposes from sight while they carry them out in practice. In such cases parol evidence of the acts & practice of the society might be very important. . . . Such evidence would not however be given to explain or interpret the rules but to show that they were a fraud & a sham (HAYES, J.).—FARRER v. CLOSE (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 602; 10 B. & S. 553; 38 L. J. Defts. took the preliminary objection that the society was at common law an illegal assocn., & further that having regard to 1871 Act, s. 4, (3) (a), the action was not maintainable, being "instituted with the object of directly enforcing any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members." The rules of the society provided that the executive committee could only sanction, as distinct from ordering, a strike, & any member striking without such sanction was not entitled to strike pay. Under certain circumstances the committee were empowered to issue notice papers to the men for signature &, if signed by two-thirds of the men, to fix a day for handing the same to the employers, & if a strike ensued the committee were to assist the men in the struggle. The committee had power to expel a member found guilty of attempting to injure the society or break it up otherwise than as allowed by the rules. Apart from this the rules did not provide that when a strike was sanctioned by the committee every member was bound to strike, nor did they prevent members who had struck from resuming work if they pleased.—Held: (1) the rules were not in restraint of trade, & the society was a lawful assocn. at common law.

It [the society] is possessed of considerable property which belongs to the members, & any member unjustly excluded may invoke the assistance of the ct. (COZENS-HARDY, M.H.).

1. Association for political purposes.]—The Victorian Assocn. was established as stated by its prospectus for the purpose of seeking out & promoting by all lawful means in its power the return to Parliament of men of liberal & enlarged views who by experience, education & character were calculated to command the respect & enjoy the confidence of their fellow colonists & who would in their political career be guided by a tenacious regard for the public welfare rather than by a desire to obtain the temporary approbation of any section of the community. On a case stated without pleadings between the joint-treasurers of the society & one of the members in an action on the undertaking of the latter to subscribe to the funds of the society.—Held: the assocn. was not illegal nor the members' undertaking a

(3) Illegality must not be presumed or inferred. It must be established, if at all, upon some plain provision in the rules (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(4) I may add that the mere introduction of some objectionable rules will not necessarily taint the whole of the rules (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(5) The right to have benefits from the funds is unenforceable. . . . The great objection to this covenant is that it might be used most oppressively by preventing a man who had never been in any confidential position & never desired improperly to use the information he had then acquired from getting employment from another master in the trade which he knew most about (COTTON, L.J.).—MINERAL WATER BOTTLE EXCHANGE & TRADE PROTECTION SOCIETY v. 981. ——A society was registered as a trade union under 1871 Act, & in addition to its rules laying down the duties of members with reference to trade questions, & imposing fines, suspension & expulsion upon members violating the rules as to trade matters, it also contained rules giving to members certain allowances out of the funds in cases of sickness, accident, infirmity, or want of employment, & other allowances similar to those of a friendly society. A member sued in the petty session ct. for one week's sick benefit which was refused to him by the society; the magistrates made an order for the payment of the sum claimed, holding that the society was substantially a friendly society, & that they had jurisdiction in the matter:—Held: as some of the objects of the society were in restraint of trade, the society was at common law an illegal assocn., & although such society was made legal to a certain extent by 1871 Act, sect. 4 of that Act prevented any ct. from entertaining or enforcing any agreement between the members to provide benefits to members, & consequently the magistrates had no jurisdiction to make the order in question.—OLD v. PORTSMOUTH "A" BRANCH OF SHIP CONSTRUCTIVE, ETC. ASSOCN. (1912), 28 T. L. R. 372, D. C.

987. ——The rules of a society registered under Trade Union Acts, 1871 (c. 31) & 1876 (c. 22), combined provisions for the militant purposes of a trade union, which were admittedly in restraint of trade, with provisions for the provident purposes of a friendly society, & the subscriptions of the members were applicable to all the purposes of the society. One of the rules provided for the expulsion of members for non-compliance with the decisions of the managing or branch committees directing the militant operations of the society or for violating the recognised trade rules of the district:—Held: an action [by the personal representative] against the society & its trustees for payment of moneys alleged to be due to a member under the rules in respect of superannuation benefit was not maintainable under the Act of 1871 & was not maintainable apart from the Act; because (1) (LORDS LOVEBURN, C. & ATKINSON), the society, being a voluntary assocn., could not have been sued in such an action in its own name; (2) (LORDS MACNAGHTEN, SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, MERSEY & ROBSON), the society was an illegal assocn. at common law, inasmuch as its main purposes were in unreasonable restraint of trade & the rules relating to those purposes were not severable from the rules relating to its provident purposes.

(3) There have been many & probably there may be still some trade unions lawful in every point of view & not depending for their legality on their immunity in the Act of 1871 (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(4) Having regard to the constitution of the society, the powers vested in its executive officers, & the blending of its funds for all purposes, it is impossible to separate from what is legal from what is not legal (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(5) The reference to the occurrence of strikes in the rules or the provision for the support of members during a strike does not per se make the association illegal (LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE).—RUSSELL v. 992. —[—There is no authority which gives a legal definition of the word "strike" but I conceive the word means a refusal by the whole body of workmen to work for their employers in consequence of either a refusal by the employers of the workmen's demand for an increase, or of a refusal by the workmen to accept a diminution of wages when proposed by their employers (KELLY, C.B.).—KING v. A trade union having been sued for damages on the ground that workmen had been induced to break their contracts with their employers by officials of the union, & that the union had ratified & adopted the acts of their officials:—Held: the union was not liable, those who procured the strike not having been authorised by the rules or by the action of the union.

(2) This word ["strike"] is of an artificial character, & does not represent any legal definition or description (LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD).

(3) I do not think that inducing or attempting to induce men not to work for a particular employer, or a combination for that purpose, is a cause of action, if it be done in furtherance of what the parties in good faith believe to be their trade interests, though it may injure the employer in his business (LORD DAVEY).

(4) A local strike will naturally be engineered by the local branch officials, but in my opinion the branch officials are not agents of the union with authority to bind the union by their acts in a local strike. Such agency must be founded on something outside the rules & its existence must be proved by those who rely on it (LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD).

(5) It is true that in certain conditions the assocn. is bound to furnish strike pay. Will that circumstance create the agency for which counsel contends? I will suppose that the employers are also members of an assocn. of coalowners, as we are told that they are, & that the coalowners' assocn. bind themselves to support each other with money in the event of any one member locking out his workmen after certain conditions had been observed. If such member locked out his men without giving the notice prescribed by contract it would seem very strange to suppose the other members were liable to damages for an act over which they had no control & which was contrary to the conditions. Yet the cases are precisely the same (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—DENABY & CADEBY MAIN COLLIERIES, LTD. v. YORKSHIRE MINERS' ASSOCN., [1906] A. C. 384; 75 L. J. K. B. 961; 95 L. T. 561; 22 T. L. To prohibit the defendants from levying such fines at the instance of parties who still wish to retain the benefit of membership of the society with its attendant advantages would be entertaining legal proceedings instituted with a view to directly enforcing an agreement within 1871 Act, s. 4.—MULLETT v. 1018. — Action to restrain proceedings on invalid ballot.]—The Executive Council of a trade union called a general ballot on the question of a levy on members, & on the proposal being defeated, decided a fortnight later to hold a second general ballot on the question of a similar levy. The voting papers at the second ballot, in breach of the rules, were not, except in the London district, checked by the scrutineers appointed to check all general ballots. The second ballot resulted in favour of the levy. The council afterwards held a third ballot as to alterations in the rules, & the ballot papers were issued to the London branch with the card numbers of the members thereon, whereby the votes of the members could be identified. Pltfs., who were members of the trade union, thereupon brought actions against members of the council for a declaration that the second & third ballots were invalid & for an injunction restraining defts. from acting thereunder:—Held: (1) if the officials of the society were satisfied that it was of extreme importance to get a reversal of a decision on the first ballot they were entitled to hold a second ballot immediately afterwards, but the second ballot was invalid as the scrutiny of about half the votes was made by the wrong persons; (2) the third ballot was invalid as there had been no such secrecy as was provided for by the rules; & the ct. was not precluded by 1871 Act, s. 4, from entertaining the actions, & there would be a declaration that pltfs. were not liable to pay the levy & that the third ballot was not properly held.—BRODIE v. BEVAN, DUNN v. BEVAN (1921), 38 T. L. R. 172.*

1019. Agreements between one union & another.]—Pltfs. were the secretary & other officials of an unregistered trade union called the Glasgow & District Glass Bottle Makers' Trade Protection Society, & defts. were the secretary & trustees of the National Federation of Glass Bottle Workers, an unregistered trade union of which pltf. society was a constituent member. The Federation had passed a resolution purporting to expel pltf. society on the ground that pltf. society had by refusing to carry out a resolution of the Federation acted in contravention of the rules & thereby forfeited its membership. In a representative action for a declaration that the expulsive resolution was invalid, & that pltf. society was still a member of the Federation, & for an injunction to restrain the Federation from acting on the resolution:—Held: the action was brought for the purpose of directly enforcing an agreement between the two trade unions whereby the one was admitted as a member of the other, & under 1871 Act, s. 4 (4), could not be entertained by the ct. Semble: one trade union may be a member of another.—McLUSKEY v. COLE, [1922] 1 Ch. 7; 91 L. J. Ch. 242; 126 L. T. 269, C. A.*

1020. —.]—Pltf. was a member of a provincial trade union which made an agreement with a London trade union that a member of the former union should, if he came to London, be entitled to membership of the latter union. Pltf.

was offered a job in London, but was refused membership in the London union, & he was therefore unable to accept the job. Pltf. thereupon brought an action against the London union & its secretary for a declaration that he was entitled to membership of the London union, & for an injunction & damages:—Held: as the agreement was made, not between pltf. & deft. trade union, but between the two trade unions & as pltf. was neither directly nor indirectly a party to it, the action failed.—*HOLLAND v. SECT. 4.—REGISTERED TRADE UNIONS

SUB-SECT. 1.—REGISTRATION.

See 1871 Act, ss. 6, 13, 17; 1876 Act, s. 6; Regulations, 1876 & 1890, Governing Registered Trade Unions, ss. 11, 15A, 15B.

1023. Conditions precedent—Trade union must be in existence.—For a trade union to be capable of registration under the 1871–1913 Acts, it must have come into existence before the date of the application for registration & not be merely a proposed trade union at that date.

When therefore two applications were made for registration of trade unions under the same name & it appeared that the application made first in time related only to a proposed & not an existing union, an order was made for registration in respect to the later application, which had reference to an existing union, the name being modified so as to prevent confusion with a union of the same name that had only ceased to exist some two years before.—Re NATIONAL UNION OF SHIPS' STEWARDES, COOKS, BUTCHERS & BAKERS, [1925] Ch. 20; 94 L. J. Ch. 37; 132 L. T. 628; 40 T. L. R. 871.

Objects must be statutory.—See Nos. 450, 954, ante.

1024. Discretion of registrar—Two applications to register in same name—Refusal to register until status of applicants determined by court.—A trade union which had been some years in operation, became divided into two sections, each section claiming to have the governing body among them. Both sections applied to register the trade union by the name which the society had always gone by. The registrar heard evidence voluntarily given by each party, & finding there was a bona fide dispute, refused to register the trade union under either application until the decision of a competent ct. determined the legal status of the applicants. On a rule for a mandamus, obtained by the parties first applying to compel the registrar to register the union on their application:—Held: (1) irrespective of the regulations, the registrar was right, under the Act, in refusing to register, so as not to alter the position of the parties; (2) the dispute between the members of this society was one which ought to be decided by the Ct. of Ch. & this ct. would not enter into the merits upon a rule for mandamus.—*R. v. (2) Deft. assocn. was registered under 1871 & 1876 Acts, & consisted of numerous lodges or branches. Each lodge elected its own officials & managed its own affairs & appointed delegates to meet & confer with delegates of kindred societies.

Pltf. alleged that he was a member of the assocn., that a resolution of its council purporting to expel him was ultra vires, & claimed an injunction to restrain the assocn. & its officials from acting on the resolution. The assocn. denied that pltf. was a member, & alleged that it had power under its rules to pass the resolution, which was valid & also pleaded that it was an unlawful combination & confederacy within the meaning of the said Acts of George III: Unlawful Societies Act, 1799 (c. 79), & Seditious Meeting Act, 1817 (c. 19):—Held: pltf. was a member of the assocn., the resolution was ultra vires, & the assocn. was exempt from the provisions of the said Acts.—LUBY v. 1035. ——— Whether enforcement of agreements within 1871 Act, sect. 4.]—(1) The foundation of the jurisdiction of the ct. to prevent a member of a voluntary assocn. from being improperly expelled is the right of property vested in such member of which he is deprived.

(2) The rules of a trade union provided that the money arising from the subscriptions of its members should be applicable in various ways for their benefit. They also purported to regulate the affairs of that trade, & provided that any journeyman binding his son in a "foul shop," being a shop in which non-union men were employed, should be fined, & not be entitled to any benefit until such fine had been paid. Pltf. a member of the union, who was alleged to have broken the rule as to apprenticeship, & who, having refused to pay the fine, had been expelled from the union, brought his action against the committee & trustees of the union claiming to be entitled to participate in its benefits, & that defts. might be restrained from excluding him from such participation:—Held: as the action was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union "to provide benefits to members," within the meaning of 1871 Act, s. 4, which the ct. was not by that sect. enabled to enforce; & as, apart from the Act, the union was an illegal assocn., pltf. was not entitled to any relief.—RIGBY v. No other discount, no money gratuities & no advantages, direct or indirect, should be offered or allowed by any member to any merchant, broker, or other person in connection with any matter or thing in anywise relating to the Tea Clearing House agreement. By rule 14, no subscriber should be entitled to warehouse or deposit tea with, or employ in connection with tea, any dock co. or tea warehouse keeper who was not a member of the Clearing House, or to purchase or sample any tea from the warehouse of any non-member.

By rule 15, any member breaking or failing to observe any of the rules was to be liable to expulsion by resolution of the committee. The committee passed a resolution expelling plffs. for an alleged breach of the rules, & they brought an action against the members of the committee to restrain them from acting on the resolution, on the ground (inter alia) that plffs. had not had an opportunity of being heard in their defence:—Held: the assocn. was a "trade union" within 1876 Act, s. 16; its objects were illegal independently of the 1871 Act, & 1871 Act, s. 4, prevented the ct. from directly enforcing the agreement between the members.

vires, it can properly be sued in its registered name, until its certificate of registration has been withdrawn or cancelled by the registrar.

The committee of a trade union passed a resolution purporting to expel one of its members from the union. To an action by the member to restrain the union & its officers from wrongfully expelling him from the union defts. pleaded that the action was not maintainable, because the expulsion was a tortious act done in furtherance of a trade dispute within 1906 Act, s. 4:—Held: 1906 Act, s. 4, did not apply to the case of a pltf. suing in respect of a breach of his contractual rights under the rules of the union.

(2) An unregistered assocn. consisted of numerous trade unions & their members. One of its objects, as defined by its rules, was illegal. Under its rules it had a president, vice-president, treasurer & secretary, & its affairs were managed by an executive committee & its funds were vested in trustees. In an action by a member to restrain the application of the funds of the assocn. to illegal purposes the president, vice-president, treasurer, & secretary were made defts. & objected that they did not represent the assocn., & that pltf. should have sued the executive committee & the trustees:—Held: deft. officials sufficiently represented the assocn. for the purposes of the action.

(3) Pltf. claimed a declaration that so much of a rule of deft. federation as provided for a parliamentary levy upon members was ultra vires & invalid; an injunction restraining deft. Federation & deft. branch union from making payments out of their funds to the Miners' Federation, & from expelling pltf. from membership of deft. federation & deft. branch union; a declaration that other defts. as trustees of the Miners' Federation were not entitled to make payments of the funds of the Federation for parliamentary purposes; & an injunction restraining last-named defts. accordingly:—Held: pltf. was entitled to the declarations & injunctions claimed; that there was nothing in 1906 Act, s. 4, precluding the making of those declarations & injunctions; that although deft. Federation had applied its funds for unlawful purposes it had not thereby ceased to be a registered trade union & therefore was rightly sued in its registered name & defts. as trustees of the Miners' Federation were rightly sued as fairly representing that body.—PARR v. LANCASHIRE & CHESHIRE MINERS' FEDERATION, [1913] 1 Ch. 366; 82 L. J. Ch. 193; 108 L. T. 446; 29 T. L. R. 235. Annotations:—As to (1) Relf. Kelly v. 1042. — Grounds for expulsion.—Bringing union into discredit.—On May 2, 1918, pltf., who was a member of the Cardiff branch of deft. registered trade union, wrote a letter to the general secretary of the head office saying that a large number of irregularities prevailed at the branch office, & making charges of serious misconduct against members of the committee, in that they were accepting engagements at prices smaller than those charged to their own employer. As a result of this letter the branch, after considerable correspondence & meetings, ultimately passed a resolution on Jan. 5, 1919, expelling pltf. from the union, as he refused to withdraw in writing the charges so made after disclaiming any intention to make any reflections on the branch or its members, & promising to write to that effect.

Under rule 16 (3) of the rules of the union it was competent for any branch, at a special or quarterly meeting, to fine, suspend or expel any member from the union, upon satisfactory proof being given that he had by his conduct "brought the union into discredit."

In an action by pltf. against the union for a declaration that the resolution expelling him was ultra vires & void, & for a consequential injunction:—Held: rule 16 (3) must be read as an enabling one as well as one dealing with procedure, & "bringing the union into discredit" meant bringing the union, or any branch of it, into discredit with the public, or any section if it, or with the other component parts of the whole organisation; the conduct of pltf. afforded ample materials for the branch to come to the conclusion to expel him, & the action failed.—WOLSTENHOLME v. AMALGAMATED MUSICIANS' UNION, [1920] 2 Ch. 388; 89 L. J. Ch. 388; 123 L. T. 741; 64 Sol. Jo. 585; 84 J. P. Jo. 266.

1043. — Participation in profit sharing scheme.—Pltfs. in the two cases were respectively members of two different registered trade unions. In the first case the rules of the trade union provided that it should be competent for the branch committee or other authorities there mentioned to fine or expel any member "working on a co-partnership system when such system makes provision for the operatives holding only a minority of the shares." In the second case the rules contained a similar power to fine or expel any member proved to be "working against the interests of the society by working on the premium bonus system."

The trade unions threatened to expel pltfs. on the ground that they were participants in a profit sharing scheme, instituted by the co. by whom they were employed, under which meritorious employees might become entitled to a share of the profits & might invest the same in the purchase of shares in the ct. This was independent of their wages, which were paid by the co. at full trade union rates. In actions by pltfs. for injunction to restrain the threatened expulsion:—Held: (1) the jurisdiction of the ct. to entertain the actions was not ousted by 1871 Act, s. 4; & (2) on the construction of the rules, pltfs. were not liable to be expelled on the ground of their participation in the profit sharing scheme.—*AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF CARPENTERS, CABINET MAKERS & JOINERS v. by the officers of a local union of the United Mine Workers of America to admit pltf. to membership therein as a result of which pltf. were unable to obtain employment:—Held: to render individual members of the local

to restrain the union from acting upon the resolution. The particulars of demand did not include any claim for damages, & having regard to the nature of the action, no damages could have been recovered:—Held: the county ct. judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the action. It is essential to the jurisdiction of the county ct. in such a case that there should be a money claim not exceeding £100, & when no such claim is made & established, the ct. cannot grant ancillary relief by way of declaration or injunction.—*R. v. 1063. Officers—Suspension from office—Right of officer to be heard.]—A registered trade union had numerous branches. The union had a chairman, a general secretary, treasurer, trustees & two auditors who were elected at the annual general meeting of the union. Each branch elected similar officials for itself. The annual general meeting consisted of delegates from the various branches. The supreme government of the union was in the annual general meeting, but the general management of the union was vested in an executive committee elected at the annual general meeting. A rule of the union empowered the executive committee (inter alia) to take every means to secure the observance of the union's rules, to remove any incompetent or insubordinate officer, & to suspend, expel & prosecute members acting contrary to the rules. For two years before Apr. 1916, B. was treasurer of his branch & was negligent in his duties, & the secretary of the branch without his knowledge misappropriated moneys. These matters were not discovered until the summer of 1918, & came before the executive committee in Nov. 1918, when the committee, disregarding B.'s application to appear before them in his defence, passed a resolution that B. "be removed from any office then held by him & not permitted to hold any delegation on behalf of the union for a period of five years." At the date of the resolution B. was chairman of his branch & one of the general auditors of the union & his competency in these offices had not been questioned. In an action by B. to restrain the union & the executive committee from acting on the resolution on the ground that it was ultra vires.—Held: (1) the rule must be construed strictly & did not justify the resolution; (2) if the resolution were within the rule, the executive committee ought, on the principles of natural justice, to have given B. an opportunity of appearing before them in his defence before they passed the resolution.—*BURN v. 1065. Necessity for compliance with statutory requirements—Subsequent compliance not sufficient.]—(1) No statutory power for two unions to amalgamate is conferred by 1876 Act, s. 12, as amended by Trade Union (Amalgamation) Act, 1917 (c. 24), s. 1, except subject to the condition precedent contained therein as to holding a ballot of each constituent union at which 50 per cent. at the least of the members vote & the votes in favour of amalgamation exceed by at least 20 per cent. the votes against it.

(2) Although under 1876 Act, s. 13, notice in writing of an amalgamation must be sent to the registrar & registered, & until this is done the amalgamation does not take effect, yet an amalgamation which is rendered invalid by reason of a failure to comply with the above condition precedent is not validated by registration of the notice nor is the registration of such a notice conclusive of the validity of the amalgamation.

(3) When funds of a constituent union have been handed to what purports to be a union formed by the amalgamation of this union with another constituent union, but the amalgamation is invalid, the amalgamated union holds any part of those funds remaining in its hands as trustees for the members of the constituent union, & will on their application in a representative action be restrained from dealing with these funds; & 1906 Act, s. 4, affords no defence to a claim for this relief.—*BOOTH v. A number of men in a lodge ceased work on account of a dispute with their employer without having laid their case before the council or the committee for their approval. The executive committee refused to grant strike pay, but the council on appeal allowed it:—Held: the resolution of the council was ultra vires.—Re DURHAM MINERS' ASSOCN., WATSON v. 1083. — — — — —.]—The objects of a trade union, as stated in the rules, were the raising of funds for mutual benefit by the contributions of the members, which were to be applied (inter alia) to giving legal aid to members when necessity arose in their relation with employers; & in cases of a dispute arising between members & their employers, or unlawful treatment of members by their employers, the executive committee were, if they considered the merits of the case justified such a course, to provide legal aid for the members. A member of the union was dismissed by his employer without a week's notice, & in answer to a letter written to him by the general secretary of the union the employer stated that the member was discharged for dishonesty. The union took proceedings on behalf of the member to recover a week's salary in lieu of notice, & the employer paid the amount. The executive committee of the union then obtained the member's consent to bring an action for libel against the employer, founded upon his letter to the general secretary, & brought an action & employed their own solrs., whose costs they paid. The action was dismissed with costs. The employer sued the union to recover his taxed costs of the action for libel:—Held: the union had instigated pltf. to bring the action, for which there was no reasonable or probable cause, that the union had wrongfully maintained pltf. in the action, having no common interest, & therefore the union were liable. Semble: there was nothing in the rules of the union to justify the action; but even if there was, the rules could not justify an act which would be wrongful if done by an individual.—GREIG v. NATIONAL AMALGAMATED UNION OF SHOP ASSISTANTS, WAREHOUSEMEN & CLERKS (1906), 22 T. L. R. 274.

1086. — Promotion of non-political unions among miners—Trade union of seamen.]—The rules of the National Union of Seamen, a registered trade union, declared one of its objects as follows: "To promote & to provide funds to extend the adoption of trade union principles, & to affiliate with such other trade unions & federations of trade unions as, in the opinion of the executive council, may appear desirable":—Held: the union had power under its rules to provide funds to promote the establishment & growth of non-political trade unions among miners.—Re NATIONAL UNION OF SEAMEN, WILSON v. NATIONAL UNION OF SEAMEN, [1929] 1 Ch. 216; 45 T. L. R. 92.

1087. — — — — —.]—At a special general meeting of deft. trade union a resolution was passed authorising a loan to the Miners' Non-Political Movement, & pltf.s., who were members of the trade union, claimed (a) a declaration that the meeting was not legally constituted or held & that the proposed loan was ultra vires, & (b) an injunction to restrain defts. from acting on the resolution. Pltf.s. contended that the resolution was void for uncertainty because the loan referred to in it would be to an undefined body. Defts. contended that the resolution referred to the miners' non-political unions which began to come into existence in Nov. 1926, & that the question of irregularity in the holding of the meeting was one of internal management & gave pltf.s. no cause of action:—Held: as it was within the power of defts. to make a loan to a non-political trade union, & as such a loan was what was contemplated by the resolution, pltf.s. could not base any claim upon the wording of the resolution, & pltf.s., suing on behalf of themselves & other members of the trade union, could not obtain the injunction claimed, however irregularly the meeting might have been summoned or conducted. Such proceedings could be brought only by the trade union itself.—COTTER v. NATIONAL UNION OF SEAMEN (1929), 45 T. L. R. 352, C. A.

returning & maintaining representatives to Parliament." The rules, however, did not provide any machinery for making a levy upon the members of the union for the purposes of the said funds, nor did they indicate the persons by whom such levy was to be made. A resolution in favour of a general contribution by the members for that purpose having been passed by a large majority of the union, the officials of the union proceeded to levy the contribution. A member of the union who objected to the contribution sought to obtain an injunction restraining the union & its officials from making the levy, upon the ground that in the absence of provision in the rules for making it the levy was illegal.—Held: as the provision of a parliamentary representation fund was within the scope of the assocn., & as the majority of the members were in favour of it, the ct. would not interfere with the levy of contributions to that fund merely because the rules did not expressly provide the necessary machinery for making it.—STEELE v. SOUTH WALES MINERS' FEDERATION, [1907] 1 K. B. 361; 76 L. J. K. B. 333; 96 L. T. 260; 23 T. L. R. 228; 51 Sol. Jo. 190.

1089. ———.—[1] The definition of a trade union contained in 1871 Act, s. 23, or the amended definition in 1876 Act, s. 16, is a limiting & restrictive definition & it is not competent to a trade union either originally to insert in its objects or by amendment to add to its objects something so wholly distinct from the objects contemplated by the Trade Union Acts as a provision to secure or maintain parliamentary representation.

(2) The certificate of the registrar under 1871 Act, s. 13, & the regulations made by the Secretary of State pursuant to that sect. of the registry of any rules or alterations of rules is not conclusive as to the validity of the proceedings taken by the society for the passing of such rules or alterations.

(3) It is important to observe that a trade union was not the creation of the Act of 1871 (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(4) Such union can buy & sell land not exceeding one acre, & personal estate without limit of amount (FARWELL, L.J.).

(5) A registered trade union is thus a statutory legal entity, anomalous in that, although consisting of a fluctuating body of individuals & not being incorporated it can own property & act by agents (FARWELL, L.J.).

(6) If a trade union as such can run a newspaper, the proprietors of The Times, for instance, can register themselves as a trade union & libel all & sundry with perfect impunity. It is said that MATHER, J., decided that the union could do so in Linaker v. Pilcher, No. 1291, post, that case was decided under somewhat unfortunate circumstances & cannot be regarded as correct (FARWELL, L.J.).—*OSBORNE v. 1090. ———.—[1] A member of a trade union society who, with other members, had been compelled by its rules to contribute to a fund for an object which could not be carried into effect, acting on behalf of himself & all other members by whom contributions had been made to the fund, applied by originating summons against the trustees in whose name the fund was invested for a declaration that upon the true construction of the rules & in the events which had happened the fund ought to be distributed among the subscribers; on account of the investments representing the fund, an inquiry who in the events which had happened were entitled to the fund; distribution of the fund among those entitled; payment into ct. of the fund pending distribution; & if & so far as necessary execution of the trusts of the fund. It was objected on behalf of defts. that pltf. was not entitled to proceed by originating summons under R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 3, since he was not a cestui que trust under the trust of any instrument, or under R. S. C., Ord. 54A, r. 1, since there was no question of construction to be determined:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to relief as a cestui que trust under the trust of any instrument with R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 3, since his claim was in default of the trust of the rules of the society, not under that trust, there was no question of construction for determination under R. S. C., Ord. 54A, r. 1, & it would not be advisable to deal with the matter partly on the summons & leave the rest to be decided in an action & no order was made on the summons.

(2) The object of the fund is perfectly clear. It is the maintenance of Parliamentary representation, & that has been declared to be illegal (SWINFEN EADY, J.).—Re AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF RAILWAY SERVANTS, ADDISON v. PILCHER, [1910] 2 Ch. 547; 80 L. J. Ch. 19; 103 L. T. 627; 27 T. L. R. 12; 54 Sol. Jo. 874.

1091. ———.—[The principle laid down in Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A. C. 87 that trade unions as defined by Parliament have no power to levy contributions from their members for the purpose of securing parliamentary representation, extends also to securing representation on municipal & other local bodies other than boards of guardians, at any rate where the levies on the members in aid of the funds are in effect compulsory.—*WILSON v. 1092. ———.—Purpose must be authorised by rules.—The general trustees of a society established as a trade union under 1871 & 1876 Acts, acting in pursuance of a resolution of the general council, subscribed £100 of the moneys of the society for self & all other members of deft. union, except the personal defts. & those members who voted in support of the resolution hereinafter mentioned, for a declaration that a payment of £100 out of the union funds to support the anti-conscription campaign, which had been made in pursuance of a resolution passed by the majority of members of the union, was ultra vires & illegal, & for an order that the said sum should be repaid to the union:—

Held: the payment was ultra vires the union.—ALLEN v. GORTON (1918), 18 S. R. N. S. W. 202; 35 N. S. W. W. N. 69.—AUS.

shares in a limited co. which had been formed with the object of publishing a newspaper in the interests of a political party known as the "Labour Party" & whose profits, after payment of 4 per cent. on its shares, were to be used in the maintenance & extension of its business. The object of the resolution of the general council was not simply to invest the moneys of the society, but to contribute to the expenses of publishing the newspaper. The shares were applied for & allotted before the passing of 1913 Act. There was nothing in the rules of the society which authorised the application of its funds for political purposes:—Held: the above application of the funds of the society was unauthorised & ultra vires, & not the less so because of the provisions of 1913 Act as that Act gave the society no further powers with reference to political objects than those contained in the rules of the society, & that therefore the trustees were liable to make good the £100 with interest.

There must be a declaration that the payment by defts. out of the funds of deft. society in respect of the purchase by defts. of the 100 shares in Labour Newspapers, Ltd., was illegal & ultra vires the powers of the society, & that the trustees are liable to make good the £100 so wrongfully applied, together with interest on the sum at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum (WARRINGTON, J.).—BENNETT v. NATIONAL AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF OPERATIVE HOUSE & SHIP PAINTERS & DECORATORS (1915), 85 L. J. Ch. 298; 113 L. T. 808; 31 T. L. R. 203.

1093. Effect of compliance with statutory regulations.—In 1925 pltf. applied to the Registrar of Friendly Societies alleging that some of the general funds of deft. union, of which he was a member, had been applied through the Trades Union Congress in furtherance of various political objects in breach of the rules of the union. The Registrar decided that there had been no breach & declined to make any order. In an action by pltf. for relief based on an alleged breach by deft. union of 1913 Act, s. 3, in respect of the same matters:—Held: (1) the conditions precedent stated in 1913 Act, s. 3 (1), having been duly complied with, the statutory restrictions thereby imposed had ceased to operate so that no breach of the statute had been established, & the action failed; (2) pltf.'s true cause of action in the circumstances was in respect of a breach of the rules of deft. union which was not directly raised upon the record; even assuming that it had been, the legislature did not contemplate that an aggrieved person who had complained to the registrar upon the footing of a breach of the rules & failed, could afterwards resort to the ct.—*FORSTER v. against society.—A society in the nature of a benefit society comprised a head & branch establishments. The society was governed by rules of 1872, which, besides providing for the benefit of its members, contained rules in restraint of freedom of trade. A dispute arose between the head establishment & a branch, & the latter having threatened to secede, an action was brought by the head establishment against the branch for an injunction to restrain the latter from dividing the funds in their possession:—Held: such action was not maintainable (a) because, under general law, some of the societies' rules were in restraint of trade; & (b) because 1871 Act, s. 4 (3), expressly excluded the ct. from entertaining such proceedings.

These principles are equally applicable whether a central society sues a branch, a society sues an individual, or an individual a society.—DUKE v. LITTLEBOY (1880), 49 L. J. Ch. 802; 43 L. T. 216; 28 W. R. 977.

A member brought an action against the officers of the society to enforce a rule of the society under which he claimed to be entitled to a superannuation allowance:—Held: upon the consideration of all the rules of the society, the main object of the society was illegal at common law as being in restraint of trade, & those rules which made provision for benefits to members were merely ancillary to that main object, & could not be separated from it, therefore, under 1871 Act, s. 4, the action must fail.—*CULLEN v. Deft. was a member of a friendly society registered under 1871 & 1876 Acts. By one of the rules of the society a member meeting with an accident & becoming totally incapacitated from following his employment for the remainder of his life was entitled to receive the sum of £100; & all members receiving such a benefit were obliged to sign an agreement that in the event of their returning to their trade they would refund to the society the amount of accident benefit received. If a member failed to refund, certain officers of the society were empowered to institute legal proceedings for the recovery of the amount received.

Deft., having met with an accident & being apparently incapacitated for life from following his employment of a moulder in an iron foundry, made a claim & received from the society a sum of £100. On receipt of that sum he signed an agreement that in case he should at any time thereafter resume work as an ironfounder, he would forthwith repay to the society the sum of £100, & that, in case that sum was not repaid within a named period, certain officers of the society should have power to sue & proceed against him in any ct. of competent jurisdiction of the said sum. Deft. was able to resume & did resume work as an ironfounder within the meaning of the agreement. In an action by the officers of the society against deft. to recover the sum of £100 under the agreement:—Held: the action was brought directly to enforce an agreement for the application of the funds of the trade union to provide a benefit to a member within 1871 Act, s. 4, & was therefore not maintainable.—*BAKER v. By 1876 Act, s. 10, which is to be construed as one act with 1871 Act, it is provided that a member of a trade union, not being under the age of sixteen years, may, by writing, nominate a person to whom any moneys payable on the death of such member, not exceeding £50, shall be paid; & that, on receiving proof of the death of a nominator, the trade union "shall pay to the nominee the amount due to deceased member," not exceeding the sum aforesaid:—Held: there was nothing in 1876 Act to show that it was intended to repeal the provisions in 1871 Act, s. 4, & consequently no action could be maintained against a trade union by the nominee of deceased member to recover a sum of money to which, under the rules of the trade union, the member of his nominee had become entitled to receive from the funds of the union.—*CROCKER v. SUB-SECT. 3.—MISAPPLICATION.

1122. Who may take proceedings—Member of union—On refusal of trustees.—(1) Where the trustees of a union refused to take legal proceedings to restrain the union from a proposed misapplication of its funds, a single member of the union was held entitled to sue in his own name, the trustees being added as defts.

(2) A rule of a trade union provided that members permitted to cease work by the sanction of the union, in accordance with the rules, should receive strike pay from the union:—Held: where members of a union had ceased work without the permission of the union, the union had no power under the rule to give its permission subsequently so as to authorise strike pay being given to such members.

(3) Another rule of the trade union provided that members of a branch of the union which might be "locked out or otherwise thrown out of employment" should, on certain conditions, receive strike pay. The members of a branch struck work illegally & without the sanction of the union. Afterwards they expressed a desire to resume work, but, as their object in resuming work was only to put themselves into a position to strike with the sanction of the union, the masters refused to allow them to go back to work:—Held: these members were not "locked out or otherwise thrown out of employment" within the rule.—*HOWDEN v. 1123. Right to injunction.—By 1871 Act, s. 4, it is provided that nothing in the Act shall enable the ct. to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to its members. Pltfs., members of a trade union within the Act, sought for an injunction to restrain other members from applying the funds in a manner contrary to an agreement to provide benefits to members:—Held: such an injunction would not be a direct enforcement of the alleged agreement & the ct. might entertain the proceeding.

Pltfs. are members of a combination associated together for purposes which are in restraint of trade, & this combination or assocn. would undoubtedly have been unlawful but for the provisions of 1871 Act, of which the sole or principal object seems to have been to place restrictions on the officers of the societies & to prevent their defalcations (Fry, J.).—*WOLFE v. 1123i. Right to injunction.—Pltf., a member of a trade union within the Act, sought an injunction to restrain the trustees & executive of the union to which he belonged from paying strike-pay out of the funds of the union to certain members of the union on strike. The whole of the funds were to be applied in carrying out the specified objects according to the rules. The union misapplied part of the funds by payments of strike money in cases not authorised by the rules. An individual member having brought an action against the union, its trustees & some of its officials, for an injunction restraining them from making the payments:—Held: the action was not instituted with the object of "directly enforcing" an agreement for the application of the funds to provide benefits to members within 1871 Act, s. 4, the object being not to apply but to prevent misapplication of the funds, & the action was maintainable.

The object of the litigation was to obtain an authoritative decision that the action of the union which was challenged by pltf. was not authorised by the rules of the union. The decision might take the form of a declaration or the form of an injunction, or both combined (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

Pltf., a member of deft. society, brought an action against the society, joining the members of the executive council as co-defts., (a) for an order to replace the sum of £1,000, being funds of the society wrongfully invested in shares of the said co., & to invest such sum in investments authorised by the rules of the society; & (b) for an injunction to restrain defts. from investing any of the funds of the society, or contributing any of such funds, in shares of the said co., & from making any levy upon any of the members of the society of any sum to be in any way applied for the purposes of the said co., & from deducting any such levy from any benefit to which the members of the said society may be entitled under the rules:—Held: the payments were not justified as within the objects of the society, & were ultra vires the powers of the society, nor could they be deemed to be an "investment" within the meaning of the rules. The members of the executive council of deft. society, who had authorised the investment, must be held personally liable to replace the money. The declaration, order, & injunction asked for must be granted.—CARTER v. UNITED SOCIETY OF BOILERMAKERS (1915), 85 L. J. Ch. 289; 113 L. T. 1152; 32 T. L. R. 40; 60 Sol. Jo. 44.

The union authorised the members on strike to sell to those still at work tickets at 2s. each for the benefit of the strikers. The proceeds of these tickets, amounting to a very large sum, were paid into the general account of the union & applied partly in payment of the "dispute pay" prescribed by the rules & partly in extra payments.

In an action by three members of the union suing in a representative capacity on behalf of the members of their respective branches, claiming

(a) a declaration that the ticket moneys could not be applied in discharge of the liability to pay dispute pay, but were held by the union, subject to certain deductions for commission & expenses, for the sole benefit of members subject to the dispute, & (b) other relief:—Held: (1) the payments were purely voluntary payments made for a particular purpose & not applicable to any other purpose, such as the payment of dispute pay, which was a liability arising under the rules; & (2) plffs. were entitled to the declaration claimed as to the application of the proceeds & to an injunction to restrain the further misapplication thereof & if necessary to an account of the expenses properly to be deducted therefrom; (3) with regard to moneys already misapplied the ct. was precluded by 1871 Act, s. 4, from granting relief either by the appointment of a receiver or by ordering an account.—*SANSOM v. 1142. Who entitled to surplus assets—Existing subscribers at the time of dissolution—Resulting trust.—A society was registered under 1871 & 1876 Acts, to raise funds by means of weekly contributions to defend & support its members in obtaining & maintaining reasonable remuneration for their labour. There were two classes of members, printers & transferrers, & by the rules of the society the printers subscribed twice as much as the transferrers, & were entitled to receive twice as much strike or lock out pay; the scale of payments also varied with the length of time a member had belonged to the society. No provision was made by the rules for the distribution of the funds of the society on a dissolution. At the time of its dissolution the society consisted of 201 members, & its unexpended funds amounted to £1,000, & the question now arose how this sum was to be distributed. The A.-G. having been served, & making no claim to the fund as bonâ vacantia:—Held: there was a resulting trust in favour of those who had subscribed to the fund, & the money was now divisible amongst the existing members at the time of the dissolution, in proportion to the amount contributed by each member to the funds of the society, irrespective of fines or payments made to members in accordance with the rules.—Re PRINTERS & TRANSFERRERS AMALGAMATED TRADES PROTECTION SOCIETY, [1899] 2 Ch. 184; 47 W. 1143. — — Not expelled members.—Members of a trade assocn. were expelled for breach of rules in restraint of trade. The assocn. passed a resolution to wind up, with a direction to their trustees to divide the surplus assets among the persons entitled under the rules. An inquiry was direct on summons as to who were the persons entitled, & in what proportions:—Held: the expelled members were properly excluded in the Chief Clerk's certificate made in answer to the inquiry.

That sect. [1871 Act, s. 3] I take to mean this, that for the present purposes the agreement is to be in force & is not to be considered void or voidable by reason that a rule or rules which are said to be illegal are merely in restraint of trade (NORTH, J.).—*STRICK v. SUB-SECT. 5.—BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS.

See 1871 Act, ss. 14, 16, sched. I.

1147. Books—Right to inspect—Employment of accountant.—By 1871 Act, s. 14, sched. I, clause 6, the rules of a registered trade union must contain provisions in respect of "the inspection of the books & names of members of the trade union by every person having an interest in the funds of the trade union."

The rules of a registered trade union provided that its books & accounts & list of members should be "open to the inspection of all the members thereof, & of all the persons having an interest in the funds, in accordance with the Trade Union Acts":—Held: members of the society were entitled to inspect the books & accounts by means of an accountant employed by them for the purpose, the accountant undertaking that the information obtained would only be used for informing his clients of the result of his inspection.—NOREY v. KEEP, [1909] 1 Ch. 561; 78 L. J. Ch. 334; 100 L. T. 322; 25 T. L. R. 289.

1148. — — — — ——In the action plff. claimed (a) inspection of the accounts of deft. union; (b) production of the books & accounts to him & his accountant; (c) damages; (d) costs. The rules of the union provided that the books & accounts should be open to the inspection of any member at all reasonable times. The union had purported to expel plff. from his membership of the union, but the judge, on Feb. 23, 1923, made an order declaring that plff. was not validly expelled. On an interlocutory motion by plff. the same judge made an order that the union should produce to plff. or his accountant their books & accounts for inspection, the accountant to undertake not to make use of any information so acquired except for communicating to plff. the result of his inspection. On the interlocutory motion no agreement was come to to treat it as the trial of the action:—Held: the proposition that, whatever be the circumstances of a case, every individual member of a trade union has a right by law to inspect the books by an accountant was a proposition which was not established by the decision in Norey v. Keep, No. 1147, ante.—DODD v. AMALGAMATED MARINE WORKERS' UNION (1923), 93 L. J. Ch. 65; 129 L. T. 401; 39 T. L. R. 379; 67 Sol. Jo. 480, C. A.

1149. — — — — — Onus of proof that employment not bonâ fide.—A member of a trade union who desires to exercise his statutory right of inspecting the books & accounts of the union under 1871 Act, s. 14, sched. I, clause 6, may "in proper cases" employ an accountant to assist him.

The onus of showing that in employing an accountant the member is not acting bonâ fide lies on the trade union resisting that inspection.—DODD v. AMALGAMATED MARINE WORKERS' UNION, [1924] 1 Ch. 116; 93 L. J. Ch. 100; 129 L. T. 819; 40 T. L. R. 44; 68 Sol. Jo. 117, C. A.

the bonâ fide mutual relief of sick members, & for other ordinary purposes of a friendly society, includes also rules for the encouragement, relief, & maintenance of men on strike, is not a friendly society within above Act, ss. 9, 44, first, because such last-mentioned purposes are not analogous to those of friendly societies properly so called; & secondly, because such purposes are those of a trade union, & are illegal as being in restraint of trade; consequently, the summary jurisdiction given to the justices by above Act, s. 24, does not apply to cases of fraud or misappropriation of the funds of such a society on the part of any of its members.—HORNBY v. CLOSE (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 153; 8 B. & S. 175; 36 L. J. M. C. 43; 15 L. T. 563; 31 J. P. 148; 15 W. R. 336; 10 Cox, C. C. 393.

No. 1150, ante, that a trades union, part of whose funds are applied to the maintenance of strikes, is an illegal society, & therefore, cannot maintain a complaint against an officer of such society for embezzlement of its funds, applies only to proceedings taken under Friendly Societies Act, 1855 (c. 63), & does not extend to an indictment.

Prisoner was indicted for forging a banker's pass book, with intent to defraud. He was treasurer to a trades union which was admitted to be within the decision in Hornby v. Close, No. 1150, ante. It was contended that such a society, having no legal existence, could possess no funds, & therefore, could not be defrauded:—Held: the objection of illegality was applicable only to the summary proceedings before magistrates provided by Friendly Societies Act, 1855 (c. 63); but did not extend to deprive the society of its remedy by indictment.—R. v. It is for the jury to say when a larceny or embezzlement took place.—R. v. BLACKBURN (1868), 33 J. P. 55; 11 Cox, C. C. 157.

ment—Order drawn up as for civil debt.]—Summonses were issued against two officers of local branches of a certain trade union under the above sect., charging them with wilfully withholding certain sums of money belonging to the union. Both defts. admitted the charges against them, & orders, headed "Civil debt" were made upon them for payment of the amounts due, or in default distress & sale. Both defts. defaulted, & application was then made for their committal to prison under the section. The magistrate refused the application on the ground that the sect. was modified by Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 6, & that, the proceedings being civil & not criminal, in order to obtain committal a judgment summons must be issued & the prosecution must prove possession of means by defts. An order nisi was then obtained, addressed to the magistrate & two defts., calling on them to show cause why the orders should not be removed & quashed on the ground that the moneys ordered to be paid were not civil debts:—Held: as the orders were regular on the face the rule must be discharged.—R. v. TRUSCOTT (1899), 81 L. T. 188; 15 T. L. R. 405; 19 Cox, C. C. 379, D. C.

1157. — — —.]—Absence of fraud.]—If an officer of a trade union wilfully withholds money of the trade union, he is not, in the absence of fraud, liable to the penalties imposed by above sect., but under above Act, s. 9, an action may be brought against him for the recovery of the money.

He made default in payment of the two sums & was sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. He was afterwards proceeded against by the general secretary of the union in the county ct. for the amount originally claimed, but the county ct. judge nonsuited pltf. on the ground that he was not entitled to maintain the action. Pltf. moved to set aside the nonsuit:—Held: on the motion to set aside the nonsuit, as pltf. had had recourse to the remedy provided by above sect., & deft. had been punished, the punishment suffered by him operated as an extinguishment of the debt.—KNIGHT v. 1164. ———.]—(1) An act lawful in itself is not converted by a malicious or bad motive into an unlawful act so as to make the doer of the act liable to a civil action.

Resps. were shipwrights employed "for the job" on the repairs to the woodwork of a ship, but were liable to be discharged at any time. Some ironworkers who were employed on the iron work of the ship objected to resps. being employed, on the ground that resps. had previously worked at iron work on a ship for another firm, the practice of shipwrights working on iron being resisted by the trade union of which the ironworkers were members. Applt., who was a delegate of the union, was sent for by the ironworkers & informed that they intended to leave off working. Applt. informed the employers that unless resps. were discharged all the ironworkers would be called out or knock off work, it was doubtful which expression was used; that the employers had no option; that the iron men were doing their best to put an end to the practice of shipwrights doing ironwork, & that wherever resps. were employed the iron men would cease work. There was evidence that this was done to punish resps. for what they had done in the past. The employers, in fear of this threat being carried out which, as they knew, would have stopped their business, discharged resps. & refused to employ them again. In the ordinary course resps. employment would have continued. Resps. having brought an action against applt., the jury found that he had maliciously induced the employers to discharge resps. & not to engage them, & gave resps. a verdict for damages:—Held: applt. had violated no legal right of resps., done no unlawful act, & used no unlawful means, in procuring resps.' dismissal; his conduct was therefore not actionable however malicious or bad his motive might be, & notwithstanding the verdict applt. was entitled to judgment.

(2) I do not doubt that every one has a right to pursue his trade or employment without "molestation" or "obstruction" if those terms are used to imply some act in itself wrongful. . . . If it be intended to assert that an act not otherwise wrongful always becomes so if it interferes with another's trade or employment, . . . I say that such a proposition in my opinion has no solid foundation in reason to rest upon (LORD HERSHELL).

(3) Combination of different persons in pursuit of a legitimate trade object occurred in the case of The Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow, & Co., No. 51, ante, & was there held to be lawful. Combination for no such object but in pursuit really of a malicious purpose to ruin or injure another would, I should say, be clearly unlawful (LORD SHAND).—ALLEN v. FLOOD, [1898] A. C. 1; 67 L. J. 1167. 1875 Act—Application of sect. 3—Combination in furtherance of trade dispute—Whether indictable for conspiracy.]—(1) Above sect. rendered legal "an agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers & workmen," & provided that it should not be indictable as a conspiracy "if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime." There it appears that strikes are legalised by Act of Parliament, & that one person would not be indictable for a crime by endeavouring to encourage or bring about that which in itself is not illegal, namely, a strike. Therefore a combination of two or more persons to do this would come exactly within the words of sect. 3 of the Act, & would not, since this Act of Parliament, be an offence against the law (KAY, L.J.).

(2) A strike is an agreement between persons who are working for a particular employer not to continue working for him (KAY, L.J.).

Its arts. of assocn. provided for the expulsion of a member by a resolution of its council if carried by three-quarters of those present, & confirmed by a general meeting. By a rule of the branch assocn. existing when applt. became a member, "when any member shall have been expelled he shall not be met in consultation or accorded professional recognition in any other form until it shall have been otherwise decided by the council." A further rule provided that if any member should be declared by the council to have omitted to comply with any of its rules, he was not to be met in consultation or recognised. A resolution expelling applt. from membership was duly carried by the council & confirmed by a general meeting, applt. being present, & heard in his defence, at both meetings; the resolution was communicated in writing by the secretary to the other members. Applt. brought an action against resps. for damages alleging (inter alia) that resps. had conspired to induce medical practitioners, members of the assocn., to refuse to meet him or to accord him professional recognition; & he contended that the rule set out above was in restraint of trade & void:—Held: (1) the rule was not in restraint of trade, since its object was not to penalise an expelled member, but to promote the interest & objects of resps.; (2) the council & the general meeting, when considering the resolution, were acting quasi-judicially, & the decisions arrived at, being supported by adequate evidence, could not be questioned without proof, of fundamental error in the procedure, or bias or malice in those present. —*THOMPSON v. (2) The words "trade dispute between employers & workmen" in Conspiracy & Protection of Property Act, 1875 (c. 86), s. 3, do not include a dispute on trade union matters between workmen who are members of a trade union, & an employer of non-union workmen who refuses to employ members of a trade union. Semble: the words are restricted to disputes between an employer & his own workmen.

(3) A threat to call men out given by a trade union official to an employer of men belonging to the union & willing to work with him is a form of coercion, intimidation, molestation, or annoyance to them & to him very difficult to resist, & to say the least, requiring justification (LORD LINDLEY).

(4) Conspiracy & Protection of Property Act, 1875 (c. 86), s. 3, has nothing to do with civil remedies.

Assuming that there was a trade dispute within the meaning of sect. 3 & that an indictment for conspiracy could not be sustained in a case like this, the difference between an indictment for a conspiracy & an action for damages occasioned by a conspiracy is very marked & is well known (LORD LINDLEY).

(5) As to pltf.'s rights. He had the ordinary rights of a British subject. He was at liberty to earn his own living in his own way, provided he did not violate some special law prohibiting him from so doing, & provided he did not infringe the rights of other people. This liberty involved liberty to deal with other persons who were willing to deal with him. This liberty is a right recognised by law, its correlative is the general duty of every one not to prevent the free exercise of this liberty, except so far as his own liberty of action may justify him in so doing (LORD LINDLEY).—*QUINN v. 1180. — Where damage resulting.—Intentional employment of unlawful means.—No actual malice proved.—A single person or a body of persons commits an actionable wrong if he or they inflict actual pecuniary damage upon another by the intentional employment of unlawful means, such as threats of coercive action, to injure that person's business, even though the unlawful means may not comprise any specific act which is per se actionable & actual malice is not proved. The element of conspiracy in a case of this kind is of importance only in considering the weight of the acts alleged & the extent of the damage resulting therefrom.—PRATT v. BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCN., [1919] 1 K. B. 244; 88 L. J. K. B. 628; 120 L. T. 41; 35 T. L. R. 14; 63 Sol. Jo. 84.

1182. ——[In 1922 pltf. fitted out an expedition to salvage cargo from the wreck of a Dutch steamship, which had sunk in 1916 in the North Sea in over 100 feet of water. Pltf. worked at the scene of the wreck whenever the weather & tides permitted during the summer of 1922 & from Apr. to July, 1923. During that time they had succeeded in cutting a hole into No. 4 hold, had buoyed the wreck, & had extracted some portions of cargo of little value at a cost of over £40,000. In July, 1923, defts., British subjects & partners in a rival salvage co., arrived on the scene in a British registered ship, & by sending down their own divers & interfering with pltf.'s diving operations, tried to secure possession of the wreck & cargo, & either prevent further work on the part of pltf. or establish themselves with pltf. in concurrent occupation:—Held: as defts.' interference was high-handed & deliberate they would be restrained until further order from doing any acts at or near the wreck whereby pltf. might be prevented or hindered in the carrying on of their salvage operations.

What follows from the findings I have stated is that defts. personally, or by their servants or agents, have trespassed upon pltf.'s possession & willfully & wrongfully interrupted & molested them in their lawful undertaking. Molestation such as that of which pltf. complain is, in my opinion, actionable where it causes damage (DUKE, P.)—THE TUBANTIA, [1924] P. 78; 93 L. J. P. 148; 131 L. T. 570; 40 T. L. 1183. ——[(1) A combination of two or more persons for the purpose of injuring a man in his trade is unlawful & if it results in damage to him, is actionable. If the real purpose of the combination is not to injure another, but to forward or defend the trade of those who enter into it, then no wrong is committed & no action will lie, although damage to another ensues provided that the purpose is not effected by illegal means.

(2) A threat to effect a purpose which is in itself lawful gives no right of action to the person thereby injured.

A trade union of retail newsagents advocated the policy of limiting the number of retail newspaper shops in a given area, & enforced that policy by procuring its members to withdraw their custom from any wholesale newsagent who supplied newspapers to a retailer opening a new shop without its permission. Certain newcomers in a district having opened shops without the union's permission & obtained supplies of newspapers from a wholesale newsagent R., pltf., who was a customer of R., at the request of the union, of which he was a member, withdrew his custom from R. & transferred it to another wholesale newsagent W. Defts., a committee representing the proprietors of the newspapers, who took the view that the union's policy was injurious to the interests of their trade, intervened at the request of R., & in order to compel pltf. to return to R. as a customer, threatened to discontinue the supply of those newspapers which W. obtained directly from them, & also to discontinue the supply of newspapers to S., a wholesale newsagent who supplied W. with others of his newspapers, unless S. ceased to supply W. with newspapers so long as W. supplied pltf. Defts. acted as they did for the sole purpose of protecting their trade, & were not actuated by spite against pltf. or by any desire to injure him. In an action to restrain defts. from interfering with the right of pltf. to continue contractual relations with W.:—Held: defts. had not committed or threatened to commit any wrong against pltf. & the action failed.—SORRELL v. SMITH, [1925] A. C. 700; 94 L. J. Ch. 347; 133 L. T. 370; 41 T. L. R. 529; 69 Sol. Jo. 641, H. L.

against deft., one of their workmen, it appeared that the workmen were employed under contracts determinable on fourteen days' notice, & subject to certain regulations under which the employer might dismiss or suspend any workman for disobedience to orders, & the workmen, in descending or ascending the mine in "cages," were to obey the orders of the banksman. Part of the miners employed at the colliery, including deft., were members of a trade union. The unionists addressed a notice to complainants that, at the expiration of fourteen days, all non-unionists must descend & ascend the mine by themselves. On the morning of the day of which such notice expired, certain workmen, of whom deft. was one, were at the pit mouth for the purpose of going down by the "cage" then in readiness for them. The first to enter the cage was a non-unionist, whereupon the other men, who were unionists, refused to go down with him. The non-unionist then went down alone, & upon the next cage coming up a few seconds afterwards, the unionists offered to go down; but the under-manager in charge refused to allow them to do so. This occurred on three successive days. The justices ordered deft. to pay substantial damages for wrongfully "absenting" himself from complainants' service, & dismissed a counterclaim by him against them for having wrongfully refused to allow him to follow his lawful employment:—Held: under the circumstances, there had been such a breach of contract on the part of deft. as entitled complainants to substantial, & not merely to nominal, damages, & the counterclaim could not be maintained.—*BOWES & PARTNERS v. 1185. — Materiality of motive—Malice.]—Defts. were members of a joint committee of three trade unions connected with the building trade in Hull. A firm of builders there having refused to obey certain rules laid down by the unions with regard to building operations, the unions sought to compel them to do so, by preventing the supply of building materials to them. In pursuance of this object, they requested pltf. a master mason & builder in Hull, who supplied building materials to the firm, to cease to supply them with such materials, but pltf. refused to do so. Thereupon, with the object of injuring pltf. in his business, in order to compel him to comply with such request, defts. induced persons who, to the knowledge of defts., had entered into contracts with pltf. for the supply of materials, to break their contracts, & not to enter into further contracts with pltf., by threatening that the workmen would be withdrawn from their employ. Pltf. sustained damage in consequence of such breaches of contract, & of the refusal of such persons to enter into contracts with him:—Held: an action was maintainable by pltf. against defts. for maliciously procuring such breaches of contract, & also for maliciously conspiring together to injure him by preventing persons from entering into contracts with him.—*TEMPERTON v. 1186. ——(1) Procuring a breach of contract is an actionable wrong unless there be justification for interfering with the legal right.

Miners employed in collieries without giving notice to their employers & in breach of their contracts abstained from working on certain days upon the direction or order of a federation of the miners given by their executive council. The federation & council acted honestly without malice or ill will towards the employers & with the object only of keeping up the price of coal by which the wages were regulated:—Held: an action for damages lay by the employers against the federation & its officers, no justification for their action being shown.

Defts. were members of a committee called the Joint Protection Committee, which was composed of representatives of five assocns. namely, the Assocn. of Touring Managers, the Variety Artists' Federation, the Actors' Assocn., the Musicians' Union, & the National Assocn. of Theatrical Employees. The minimum wage for chorus girls was fixed by the Actors' Assocn. at £2 10s. per week. Pltf. paid his chorus girls £1 10s. per week. The contracts were from week to week, provided for a week's rehearsal without pay, & for "no play, no pay." No tour was booked for any fixed period, or for any appreciable time ahead. One member of pltf.'s co., a girl of eighteen, was living in immorality with another member of the co., who was a deformed dwarf. Pltf. knew that they were living together when he engaged them at a joint salary of £3 a week. The girl was induced to lead an immoral life because she did not earn enough money to live on. In the case of another member of the co., whose wages were £1 10s. a week, the evidence given showed that there were reasons for believing that she was resorting to immorality. There was no doubt that the members of the co. were leading a hand to mouth existence. Defts. desired in the interests of the theatrical calling & its members to stop such under payment & its evil consequences, & as the only means of doing so, induced theatre proprietors not to allow pltf. the use of their theatres, either by breaking contracts already made or by refusing to enter into contracts:—Held: defts. were justified in their action, as they owed a duty to their calling & its members to take all necessary steps to compel pltf. to pay his chorus girls a living wage, so that they should not be driven to supplement their earnings by misconduct for the purpose of gain.

The trade union had originally sanctioned the strike in ignorance of the existence of the before-mentioned contracts, but subsequently gave the workmen strike pay, after they became aware of those contracts, in order to keep the workmen out on strike:—Held: the trade union, by procuring a continuing breach of contract by the workmen, had rendered themselves liable in damages to the employer.

Sect. 7.—Torts arising out of trade union operations: Sub-sect. 3, A. & B.; sub-sect. 4.]

(3) It was argued that, having regard to the constitution of the union as established by its rules, which appear in the rules of 1904, the union, the central body, stood to the branch in the relation of principal & agent, or that the branch was a constituent part of one central body, that is to say the union, that is deft. assocn., so that the action & knowledge of the branch would be the action & knowledge of the central body. I am of opinion that this contention cannot be justified.

... The House of Lords in Denaby & Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Yorkshire Miners' Assocn., No. 994, ante, held that the branch officials were not as such officers or agents of the central body, but in my judgment the decision in the House of Lords in no way exonerates the central body from responsibility, if a central body in fact orders or authorises the branch officials wrongfully to withdraw men from their employment. ...

But I have to consider in the present case whether the fact that the branch was asking the union to sanction the strike makes the union & the branch stand either in the relation of principal & agent, or in such relation that the duty to communicate would justify the imputation of the knowledge of the branch as the knowledge of deft. assocn. I have grave doubts as to this. It is quite clear that the relation is not that of principal & agent (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

(4) The case against D. [the local trade union official] depends on his knowledge of the scagliola contracts. He says that he did not know of these contracts, & the Lord Chief Justice has found that until Jan. 17 he did not know (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—*SMITHIES v. NATIONAL ASSOCN. Pltf. was a member of the Independent Cigar Makers' Union. Deft. B. & the other employees were members of the Cigar Makers' Mutual Asscn. When pltf. entered into the employment B. asked her if she belonged to the asscn. She replied that she did not. B. said, "You'll have to join next week or we won't work with you." A week later pltf. was asked if she had joined, & on her answering in the negative B. said, "You can't work here." Pltf. replied, "You can't sack me. Mr. Phineas Phillips took me on; he alone can sack me." B. thereupon said, "Then we'll strike." Defts. then went to Mr. Phineas Phillips, who thereafter said to pltf., "My workpeople refuse to work with you, & will go on strike if you don't join; you'll have to go." Mr. Phineas Phillips at the trial stated that B. said that pltf. had refused to join their union & that their union instructed them that if she stayed they would not stay there. He said that he felt compelled to discharge her, as he did not care to see his employees go out. The county ct. judge held that there was no evidence of a threat to go to the jury & non-suited pltf.:—Held: the county ct. judge was right in so holding.

It was not suggested that defts. had done anything illegal in giving the notice determining the contract. . . . A branch of a musicians' trade union having expelled pltf. from the union passed a resolution of Feb. 2, 1919, that as pltf. was now a non-member of the union the members of the branch would not, after Mar. 3, 1919, play with him, & any member so doing would be treated as a non-member. On Feb. 7, 1919, the passing of this resolution was notified by the secretary of the branch to the manager & also to the musical director of the cinema where pltf. was employed. The enforcement of this resolution was suspended during correspondence & further meetings, & ultimately, on Apr. 21, 1919, the secretary of the branch wrote to inform pltf.'s employer that the resolution of Feb. 2 would be acted upon, whereupon pltf., who had on Feb. 15, 1919, received from his employer a fortnight's notice of dismissal, was instantly dismissed. In an action by pltf. against the secretary & members of the branch committee alleging threats & coercion by them & asking for an injunction to restrain them from individually or collectively interfering with his right to dispose of his labour as he would:—Held: the simple notification to the employer of an intention to do a lawful act, or lawful acts, whether on behalf of an individual or of a number of persons, could not properly be described as the use of illegal means against the person employed, & the action failed.—WOLSTENHOLME v. The object of the agreement was to secure a supply of men who submitted to the decisions of the National Maritime Board, a body formed to establish "a single source of supply of sailors & firemen controlled by employers & employed." 1233. ——— No illegal means employed.—Pltfs. sued defts. for damages for conspiracy, & alternatively, for money had & received by defts. to the use of pltfs., on the ground that the money had been obtained from them by duress. The action was tried by AVORY, J., & a jury, & at the conclusion of pltfs.' case defts. submitted that there was no case to go to the jury. The judge overruled that objection, whereupon defts. elected to call no evidence, & the jury returned a verdict for £132 & judgment was given for pltfs. for that sum. Pltfs. & defts. were all members or officials of the M. Trade Asscn., which was an asscn. composed of manufacturers, agents, & dealers in motor cars, formed with the object of encouraging & protecting the motor industry in the United Kingdom & of insuring that all members of the trade should deal fairly with each other. One of the matters it endeavoured to deal with was to prevent the agents who sold motor cars for manufacturers from selling motor cars at prices either above or below the manufacturers' list prices. The asscn. endeavoured to enforce the list price by putting those who contravened it on a "stop list," the effect of which would be that no member of the asscn. would supply goods to the named person, or to any one who supplied him with the protected goods. Pltfs. were a firm of motor agents & dealers who had been members of the M. Trade Asscn. for some years. In Jan. 1926, it came to the notice of the asscn. that pltfs. had transgressed one of the rules of the asscn. by selling a motor car at a price below the list price. In fact they had been induced to do so by an agent of the asscn., to whom they sold a motor car at the full list price, but included in that price a full year's tax, about £9, & some other minor matters. One of the partners in pltf. firm attended before the stop list committee of the asscn., with notice of the charge against him, & the committee informed him, by letter of Mar. 18, 1926, that if he would pay £200, buy back the car sold at its list price, & insert a signed undertaking in the journal of the asscn., he would not be put on the stop list. He assented on Mar. 22, but got the fine altered to payment in two instalments. On Mar. 24 he sent the asscn. a cheque for £332, being £225 for the re-purchase of the car; £7 the cost of the undertaking; & £100 for the first instalment, the balance to be paid in three months. Before the second instalment became payable the Ct. of Criminal Appeal decided in R. v. Denyer, No. 1234, post, that to obtain money by a threat to put on the stop list was criminal. Pltfs. thereupon refused to pay the second instalment, & ultimately issued a writ against defts. The M. Trade Asscn. had no express power to demand an apology or an undertaking for future conduct from a member who undersold:—Held: the judge should have withdrawn the case from the jury because the evidence only showed an agreement to forbear from doing a legal act, putting pltfs. on the stop list, if pltfs. would do an act which was not unlawful, i.e. pay money which pltfs. might legally pay & the asscn. might receive; & such an agreement was not a conspiracy; there being neither unlawful end nor unlawful means.—HARDIE & LANE, LTD. v. CHILTON, [1928] 2 K. B. 306; 97 L. J. K. B. 539; 139 L. T. 275; 44 T. L. R. 470, C. A.

1234. Right to demand money—In consideration of withholding name from "stop list."—An asscn., formed to watch over & protect the interests of manufacturers, wholesale retailers & users of motor goods, had by its bye-laws power to place upon a stop list published by the asscn. the name of any person who was proved to its satisfaction to have offered, advertised or sold any motor vehicle or motor goods at a price above or below the manufacturers' fixed price lists, & no member of the asscn. was allowed to supply any motor goods to any person whose name was on the stop list. The asscn. usually offered any person who had offended as an alternative to inclusion in the stop list an opportunity to give an undertaking not to offend again & to pay a sum of money to the asscn. Applt. was the servant of the asscn. & superintendent of its stop list. R., who was the proprietor of a garage but not a member of the asscn., & who had sold a tyre & offered to sell a motor car at a certain price, appeared before the asscn. on a charge of selling motor goods below list prices. Applt. in the performance of his duty as the superintendent of the asscn.'s stop list wrote to R. on Jan. 14, 1926, that at a meeting of the asscn. it was resolved "that you be offered an alternative of inclusion in the stop list of payment of £250 to the indemnity fund of this asscn. & publication of the enclosed form of undertaking in Motor Commerce. Please therefore let me have two cheques, one for £250 made payable to this asscn., & one for £7 made payable to Motor Commerce, together with the enclosed form of undertaking duly signed on or before Monday next, 18th inst., otherwise I shall have no option but to include your name in the stop list, which must be in the printer's hands by that date." R. did not sign the undertaking or pay the money demanded, & his name accordingly appeared in the stop list published in the issue of Motor Commerce of Jan. 23. Applt. was charged under Larceny Act, 1916 (c. 50), s. 29 (1), of uttering a letter knowing the contents thereof, demanding money with menaces without reasonable or probable cause, & convicted.

It did not follow that if the asscn. had the right to put the name of a person upon the stop list it had also the right to demand money from him as the price of not doing so.—*R. v. 1237. What amounts to trade dispute.]—(1) In an action for damages for inducing pltf.'s employers to dismiss him, by threats that otherwise the union men would cease working, the defence was that the acts, if any, of deft. were not actionable as provided by 1906 Act, s. 3. The jury found that there was no trade dispute existing or contemplated by the men, & that deft.'s threats were uttered in order to compel pltf. to pay a union fine & to punish him for not paying it, & to prevent him from getting or retaining employment, & they gave pltf. damages:—Held: there was as a matter of fact evidence to justify the findings of the jury.

(2) "Trade dispute" is a familiar phrase in earlier Acts of Parliament, & is defined in this Act

[1906 Act]. I do not know that the definition is of much assistance. If this sect. [1906 Act, s. 3] is to apply there must be a dispute, however the subject-matter of it be defined. A mere personal quarrel or a grumbling or an agitation will not suffice. It must be something fairly definite & of real substance. Let me see how this alters the pre-existing law. It is clear that, if there be threats or violence, this sect. gives no protection, for then there is some other ground of action besides the ground that "it induces some other person to break a contract" & so forth. So far there is no change. If the inducement be to break a contract without threat or violence, then this is no longer actionable, provided always that it was done "in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute." What is the meaning of these words I will consider presently. In this respect there is a change. If there be no threat or violence, & no breach of contract, & yet there is "an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labour as he wills," there again there is perhaps a change. It is not to be actionable, provided that it was done "in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute."

(3) I come now to the meaning of the words "an act done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute." These words are not new in an Act of Parliament; they appear in 1875 Act. I think they mean that either a dispute is imminent & the act is done in expectation of & with a view to it, or that the dispute is already existing & the act is done in support of one side to it. In either case the act must be genuinely done as described, & the dispute must be a real thing imminent or existing. I agree that the sect. cannot fairly be confined to an act done by a party to the dispute. I do not believe that was intended. A dispute may have arisen, for example, a single colliery, of which the subject is so important to the whole industry that either employers or workmen

i. — "Extending beyond limits of any one State."—An industrial dispute extending beyond the limits may think a general lock out or a general strike is necessary to gain their point. Few are parties to, but all are interested in, the dispute. If, however, some meddler sought to use the trade dispute as a cloak beneath which to interfere with impunity in other people's work or business, a jury would be entirely justified in saying that what he did was done in contemplation or in furtherance, not of the trade dispute, but of his own designs, sectarian, political, or purely mischievous, as the case might be. These words do, in my opinion, in some sense import motive, & in the case I have put a quite different motive would be present. If the jury so found, the meddler would not be protected by 1906 Act, s. 3. But I have no doubt that an act done with a single eye to the dispute, "in contemplation or in furtherance" of it, would not be actionable on any of the grounds specified in the sect. 1240. — —.]—In 1919 pltf. was employed as a "charge hand" by a firm of contractors on work on which most of the workmen belonged to deft's. trade union. The trade union to which pltf. belonged was not recognised by deft's. union, which regarded the members of pltf. union as non-unionists. This policy was being strongly opposed by the Masters' Asscn., & for some time past the question of the employment with unionists of non-unionist workmen in general & of pltf's. union in particular had been under discussion between defts. union & the masters, accompanied in one instance by a strike which was still unsettled. Deft., who was the London district secretary of his union, was sent to the place of pltf.'s employment to investigate complaints about the employment of non-unionists, with power to call out the union men. Deft. asked pltf. to join his union, & on pltf.'s refusal deft. called out all the union men, thereby stopping the work, & subsequently informed pltf. that similar trouble would occur on any job on which pltf. was employed. Deft. told the manager of the co. for which the work was being done that no further work would be done until pltf. had been removed. When the Masters' Asscn. subsequently inquired whether the job would be allowed to proceed if pltf. were discharged, deft. replied that if pltf. were discharged & a member of deft's. union put in charge, the job could proceed at once. The contractors accordingly dismissed pltf., who then brought this action for damages, & an injunction on the ground that deft. had by threats to pltf. or his employers illegally induced, coerced & procured his dismissal.—Held: (1) there was an existing trade dispute between employers & workmen connected with the employment of pltf. & others within 1906 Act, s. 5 (3), & the members of deft's. union were called out by him in furtherance of such trade dispute; (2) there were no threats or coercion used by deft. against pltf. or his employers for which deft. could be sued either by him or them.

(3) In the absence of conspiracy or unlawful combination, a firm or even emphatic statement by one person that unless the person whom he is addressing consents to the adoption of a particular course which he can lawfully take, the speaker will do that which he is lawfully entitled to do, is not a threat for which the speaker can be held liable at law.—*HODGES v. r. Illegal strike—Liability of trade union for acts of agents.—WADDELL v. AUSTRALIAN WORKERS' UNION (1922), 30 C. L. R. 570.—AUS.

t. — Refusal to act on award.]

—In an industry governed by a Federal award, decisions adverse to the employees were given upon various claims submitted by them to the Federal tribunal constituted for the purpose of determining disputes in the industry. Certain of the employees thereupon, at a meeting held for the purpose, determined not to resume work & did not, in fact, resume their work:—Held: the employees should be deemed guilty of a default of public duty in aiding an illegal strike.—MOUNT KEMBLA COLLIERIES, LTD. v. CRAIG, [1921] N. S. W. Ind. Arb'n. Cas. 102.—AUS.

a. — — — — ——The effect of Commonwealth Conciliation & Arb'n. Act, 1904–1921, s. 6a, is to prohibit the doing of anything in the nature of a lock-out or strike in relation to an industrial dispute, which has been settled by an award of the Commonwealth Ct. of Conciliation & Arb'n. by any person or organisation bound by, or entitled to the benefit of, that award; & the sect. does not prohibit members of an organisation of employees which is bound by an award from striking by ceasing in concert to work while in the employment of an employer who is not bound by the award, such ceasing to work being in consequence of an industrial difference between the organisation & that employer only.—METROPOLITAN GAS CO. v. 1254. ————]—Effect of existence of malice.—Employees who were on good terms with their employer & had contracted to serve him at a fixed wage, were ordered by the officials of their union to strike for higher wages.

In an action claiming damages for inducing the employees to break their contracts, defts. officials of the union, pleaded that the acts of which pltf. complained were acts done by them "in contemplation or furtherance" of a trade dispute within 1906 Act, s. 3, & therefore, the action was not maintainable against them:—Held: the defence was a good defence, notwithstanding that the motive prompting the acts was not altogether free from malice, since the existence of malice did not render the protection of the statute for acts done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute void.—*DALLMORE v. SUB-SECT. 3.—IMMUNITY OF TRADE UNION FROM ACTION OF TORT.

See 1906 Act, s. 4.

1257. Whether limited to acts in contemplation or furtherance of trade dispute.—(1) 1906 Act, s. 4, is general in its application, & protects a trade union against any action of tort & is not limited to a tortious act arising out of a trade dispute. Therefore, an action for malicious prosecution will not lie against a trade union.

(2) An action will lie against a member or official of a trade union for a tort committed by him when acting on behalf of himself & all other members of the union 1906 Act, s. 4, only preventing him from being so sued as to render the trade union as such & its funds liable for the tortious act.—*BUSSY v. 1258. ————]—A trade union which published a newspaper was sued for damages in respect of an alleged libel published therein. There was no trade dispute going on or in contemplation at the time of the publication of the alleged libel:—Held: the action was maintainable & 1906 Act, s. 4, had no application.—*RICKARDS v. workmen should not be indictable as a criminal conspiracy, if the act when committed by one person would not be a crime. It thus struck, in the particular instance mentioned, at the principal of the criminal law of conspiracy to the effect that it is the "agreement or combination" which is the essence of the crime, & that therefore, or combination or agreement to do, or procure to be done, something not in its own nature criminal if done by one person, might still be a crime (LORD ATKINSON).

1264. Action for injunction to restrain future tortious act.]—(1) Pltfs. were dealers in motor cars. Deft. assocn. was a trade union certified as such under 1913 Act, s. 2 (3), & other defts. were respectively the chairman & members of the council of the assocn. The assocn. consisted of manufacturers of motor vehicles & motor goods, & the manufacturers fixed certain prices for their goods, above or below which they deemed it undesirable that their goods should be sold. In order to enforce this object, the bye-laws of the assocn. provided that on proof to the satisfaction of the council that any person has offered or advertised or sold any proprietary price maintained article at a price above or below the price fixed in the protected list, the council might place the name of that person on a list called the "stop list," & give notice thereof to all members of the assocn., with an exception in the case of contracts existing at the date of admission of the proprietor to membership; & the council might also place on the stop list the name of any person who should supply proprietary price maintained articles to, or have any trade relations in regard to those articles with, any person whose name was on the stop list. The bye-laws further provided that no member of the assocn. should supply any proprietary price maintained article to, or have any trade relations in regard thereto with, any person whose name was on the stop list. Pltfs., who were not members of the assocn., on behalf of a customer advertised for sale a new motor car, which was being manufactured by a member of the assocn. & was to be delivered shortly, at a price exceeding the price fixed by the manufacturer. The council of the assocn., after hearing pltfs., decided to place their name on the stop list, & published the stop list with pltfs.' name, among others, on it in the trade journals. Pltfs. thereupon brought an action for an injunction to restrain defts. from publishing pltfs.' name in the stop list, or from publishing any libel of pltfs. injuriously affecting them in their business. The libel complained of was the publication of the stop list, which stated that "in pursuance of its policy of conserving the fixed retail prices scheduled in its protected lists, the Motor Trade Assocn. issues the subjoined stop list under power of its bye-laws. . . . Until further notice the following parties are not to be supplied directly or indirectly with any of the articles on the protected lists of this Assocn." Then followed the names & addresses:—Held: the publication of pltfs.' name in the stop list was done by defts. bona fide in the protection of trade interests of the members of the assocn., & therefore was not unlawful, & an injunction should not be granted.

(2) 1906 Act, s. 4, which provides that "an action against a trade union . . . in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the trade union shall not be entertained by any ct."—applies to an action for an injunction to restrain the future commission of a tortious act.—*WARE & DE FREVILLE, LTD. v. 1276. Position of district delegate—Whether union or officials bound by acts of delegate.] — Pltfs. were shipwrights, employed by the day by a firm of ship repairers to execute repairs to the woodwork of a ship. Some ironworkers who were members of a trade union were employed on the ironwork of the ship, & they objected to working in the same yard with pltfs. upon the ground that the latter had previously worked at ironwork on ships in another yard. The district delegate of the union was called in by the ironworkers, & he informed the employers that the ironworkers would leave off work unless pltfs. were discharged that day. In consequence of that threat pltfs. were discharged at the end of the day. Pltfs. brought an action against the district delegate, the chairman, & the general secretary of the union, for maliciously, & with intent to injure pltfs., inducing the employers to discharge pltfs., & to refuse to engage them again. The jury found that the district delegate acted maliciously, & that pltfs. had been injured thereby, but that other two defts. did not authorise his acts:—Held: the district delegate was not the agent or servant of the members of the union, so as to render each member liable for his acts, & therefore, the chairman & general secretary were not, merely by reason of their being members of the union, liable in the action.—*FLOOD v. 1285. Members of trade protection society.—Members passing resolution authorising expenditure.]—By the rules of a society "for the protection of trade" the professed object of which was to watch the progress of measures through Parliament affecting the trade interests, & to protect its members from the practices of the fraudulent & dishonest, the committee had the appointment of the printer & stationer, to be elected from among the members of the society; & to the committee was to be referred the defraying of the expenses, & the applying & disposing of the moneys of the society. It was also provided by the rules, that the sum of £10 should be left in the secretary's hands to meet the current expenses; but that all orders for the payment of money should be drawn by secretary upon the treasurer at a committee meeting. Pltf. was appointed printer & stationer to the society, & shortly afterwards paid his subscription. Defts., who were members of the committee passed the resolutions for the orders for printing & stationery which were supplied by pltf.:—Held: pltf. was not precluded by the rules from suing defts., as the rules did not create a partnership between the members of the society; & it was not to be inferred from the rules that pltf. looked to the fund, & not to the parties who gave the orders.—CALDICOTT v. GRIFFITHS (1853), 8 Exch. 898; 1 C. L. R. 715; 23 L. J. Ex. 54; 17 J. P. 601; 155 E. R. 1618.

C., Ord. 51, r. 9.]—An order may be made under above rule authorising one or more persons to defend on behalf of all persons interested, against the will of the person or persons so authorised. Pltf., a member of a labour protection league, sued to enforce his rights under a rule of the league, which provided that, in case of a member being permanently disabled by an accident, a levy should be made on the members of the league for his benefit, & applied for an order authorising the president & secretary of the league to defend on behalf of all the members. The president & secretary opposed the application:—Held: an order could properly be made.—WOOD v. MCCARTHY, [1893] 1 Q. B. 775; 62 L. J. Q. B. 373; 69 L. T. 431; 41 W. R. 523; 9 T. L. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 9, to sue defts. in their representative character, inasmuch as the members of the trade unions assumed to be represented by the officers of the trade unions had no such interest in the cause or matter as was contemplated by the rule.—*TEMPERTON v. It consisted of about 15,000 members, & its business & affairs were conducted under the control & supervision of a management committee, of which the chairman vice-chairman, & secretary were members. Pltfs. issued the writ in the action against the chairman, vice-chairman, & secretary of the guild "sued on their own behalf & on behalf of all other members of" the guild, & applied for an order under above rule, that defts. should be appointed to represent all other members of the guild:—Held: the order ought not to be made.—*MERCANTILE MARINE SERVICE ASSOCN. v. a. Purchase of goods on credit.—Statutory inability to buy on credit.]—Pltf. sued the officers & directors of a co-operative assn. incorporated under R. S. O. 1887, c. 166, for the price of goods sold on credit, the assn. being by their Act of incorporation forbidden to buy in that way.—Held: pltf. could not recover, as no action could be maintained upon an implied use, debts. were named twice in the writ & statement of claim, (a) without any qualification, & (b) in a representative capacity, as representing an unregistered trade union, the Motor Trade Assocn., & its members. The statement of claim alleged that debts. controlled the assocn. for all practical purposes & that its funds were vested in them:—Held: (1) there being no community of interest between debts. & the other members of the assocn., so far as regards the subject-matter of the action or the defence to it, the case would not be brought within the provisions of R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 9, & the claim so far as it was made against debts. in a representative capacity must be struck out & dismissed; (2) the case came within 1906 Act, sect. 4, prohibiting any action in tort against any trade union, the sect. applying equally to union of masters or of workmen or of the two.—*HARDIE & LANE, LTD. v. Therefore, in an action brought against them for a libel contained in the newspaper, the trustees can be sued in their capacity of trustees so as to bind the funds of the trade union.

Looking at the rules, & at the objects of the society there disclosed there can be no question that it was within the power & objects of the society to establish & carry on the newspaper (MATHEW, J.).—*LINAKER v. 1295. — Liability to be sued in registered name.—(1) A trade union, registered under 1871 & 1876 Acts, may be sued in its registered name.

The very omission from the statute of any provision authorising & directing that it shall sue & be sued in any other name than that given to it by its registration appears to me to lead to no other reasonable conclusion than that in so creating it, it was intended by the Legislature that by that name & by no other it should be known & that for all purposes that name should be used & applied to it in all legal proceedings unless there was any other provision which militated against such a construction (LORD BRAMPTON).

(2) Parliament has legalised trade unions, whether registered or not (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

Pltf. applied for an order that he might be at liberty to interrogate dft. as to the contents of the documents scheduled to his affidavit :—Held : the application must be refused inasmuch as a person in the position of a servant cannot be required to answer an interrogatory asking him to give the contents of documents in the possession of his master.—*BALFOUR v. which H. attended. At this meeting the attention of H. was called to rule 20 & he was asked to dismiss D. which he refused to do. After the meeting further discussions took place between some of the members, including W., & H., & eventually H. consented to give & did give D. notice determining his employment. In an action by D. against the officials of the assocn. claiming damages & an injunction to restrain them from interfering with him in his calling on the ground that they had used their position & influence as officials to bring undue pressure to bear on H. to procure his dismissal:—Held: rule 20 was in unreasonable restraint of trade & void, but not on that account an offence at common law.

1308. Validity of bye-laws regulating conduct.—An assocn. formed to promote & protect the cotton trade in L. made a bye-law rendering a member liable to expulsion for disreputable conduct in dealings with members of associated societies. Pltfs. having sold cotton, the bills of lading of which were forged to a firm, members of a German assocn., with whom the L. Assocn. had agreed that refusal to arbitrate upon questions in dispute should constitute disreputable conduct, refused to submit the questions between themselves & such firm to arbn., & a foreign award was made against pltfs. for payment of a large sum of money. By German law an “enforcement order” is necessary before an award can be enforced. The L. Assocn. having threatened to expel pltfs. under their bye-law:—Held: the bye-law & agreement were within the powers of the assocn., & not being oppressive on the minority of its members, were intra vires; also the assocn. was not a trade union or illegally registered as a co.—MERRIFIELD, ZIEGLER & Co. v. LIVERPOOL COTTON ASSOCN., LTD. (1911), 105 L. T. 97; 55 Sol. Jo. 581.

Annotations:—Mentd. Harrop v. Harrop, [1920] 3 K. B. 386.

1309. Membership—Resignation—Withdrawal of resignation—Re-election.—The members of a voluntary trade protection society became such by election & paid an annual subscription in return for which they were entitled to legal assistance for the purposes of their trade & to some other benefits. By the rules the members incurred no obligation beyond the payment of their subscriptions. The rules contained no provision as to the retirement or expulsion of members:—Held: a member was entitled to retire at any time without any consent of the other members that on the receipt by the society of a letter from a member stating his wish to retire he at once ceased to be a member without the necessity of the acceptance by the society of his resignation; that he could not before acceptance withdraw his resignation; & he could not become a member again without re-election.—FINCH v. OAKE, [1896] 1 Ch. 409; 65 L. J. Ch. 324; 73 L. T. 716; 60 J. P. 309; 12 T. L. R. 156; 40 Sol. Jo. 224, C. A.

1314. —.—DAVIES v. THOMAS, No. 1307, ante.

1315. —.—A society consisting of authors, composers, publishers, & proprietors of musical, literary, & dramatic works, was formed with the object of enforcing on behalf of its members the rights & remedies of the owners of the copyright in such works as regards public performances of them. The society was registered as a co. & by the arts. of assocn. members of the society who were publishers undertook to assign to it their interest, present & future, in the performing rights of any works published by them, & the society thereby acquired the sole right to licence or forbid the public performance of any such works:—Held: such society was not a “trade union” within the Trade Union Acts.—*PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY, LTD. v. 2. Mark capable of registration as design.]—The mere fact that a proposed trade mark is capable of being registered as a design is not a fatal objection to its registration as a trade mark.—Re UNITED STATES PLAYING CARD CO.'S APPLICATION, [1908] 1 Ch. 197; 77 L. PART I. SECT. 1.

a. Interpretation of Canadian law—Reference to English decisions.]—

The Canadian law respecting trade marks being derived from English legislation reference for its interpretation should be had to English decisions, more especially as the law extends throughout the Dominion, & it is desirable that the jurisprudence should be uniform.—R. v. AUBIER (1897), Q. R. 6 Q. B. 146.—CAN.

b. Definition.]—A trade mark is a distinctive picture which would indicate to a purchaser of the article bearing it the means of getting the same article in future, by getting an article with the same mark on it.—MITCHELL & CO. v. JOSHUA BROTHERS (1891), 17 V. L. R. 736.—AUS.

c. —.]—Under the language of Trade Mark & Design Act, R. S. 1906 (c. 71), s. 3 (a), a general trade mark means a trade mark used in connection with the various articles in which the proprietor deals in his trade, & may cover several classes of merchandise if the proprietor is trading in such several classes. On the other hand, under sub-sect. (b) a specific trade mark is limited to a class of merchandise of a particular description, so if appet. deals in two different classes of merchandise he must apply for two specific trade marks, one applicable to each class.—Re NOELLE'S TRADE MARK (1913), 13 F. L. R. 366; 14 D. L. R. 385; 49 C. L. J. N. S. 753.—CAN.

d. Interpretation of Indian law—Unaffected by English law.]—In respect of rights in trade marks & trade names any rights acquired by the parties in England have no effect on the rights of the parties in India. The rights of industrial property in India are governed by the laws of India & are in no way affected by the laws of England or by the action of the parties in England.—VON WULFING v. JIVANDAS & SON, (1924), 1. L. R. 50 Bom. 402.—IND.

11. As property.]—In India there being no Registration Act giving the right of property in trade marks by registration, the only right of action a trader or manufacturer has, is the common law right of action which entitles him to an injunction restraining the use of a trade mark belonging to him.—VON WULFING v. JIVANDAS & SON, (1921), 1. L. R. 50 Bom. 402.—IND.

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

31. Mark to be used to indicate goods of applicant.]—ASHTON & PARSONS v. GOULD (1909), 7 C. L. R. 598.—AUS.

31i. —.]—Property cannot be acquired in marks, etc., known to a particular trade as designating quality merely, & not, in themselves, indicating that the goods to which they are affixed are the manufacture of a particular person.—PARTLO v. TOUD (Ont.) (1888), 17 S. C. R. 196.—CAN.

31ii. —.]—WILSON v. LYMAN (1898), 25 A. R. 303.—CAN.

31v. —.]—STANDARD IDEAL CO. v. STANDARD SANITARY CO., C.R., [1911] A. C. 78; [1911] A. C. 259; 80 L. J. P. C. 87; 103 L. T. 440; 27 T. L. R. 63; 27 R. P. C. 789.—CAN.

e. Descriptive word—Whether registrable.]—Such a word as "Bovax," being a mere term of description, is not capable of being appropriated as a trade mark under Trade Marks Statute 1864, or of being registered under Trade Marks Registration Act, 1876.—LEWIS v. KLAPPROTH (1885), 11 V. L. R. 214.—AUS.

f. —.]—A word or representation having reference to the character or quality of the goods, may form part of a distinctive label.—

5. Mark to be used without delay.]—The bona fide intention to use a trade mark, as indicated by Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 37, means a definite intention of the proprietor to use the mark consistently & without delay. Registration with a doubtful intention of possibly using the mark should circumstances make it expedient or with the intention of assigning it to a limited co. for that co.'s user, does not satisfy the sect., & in such cases the mark may, upon application be removed from the register.—Re DUCKER'S TRADE MARK (1928), 97 L. J. Ch. 353; 139 L. T. 271; 72 Sol. Jo. 502; 45 R. P. C. 397, C. A.

6. Mark capable of being applied to goods sold in United Kingdom.]—This was an appeal under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), from a refusal of the registrar of patents, designs & trade marks to register a trade mark. The mark applied for consisted in the centre of a cross & in the angles the letters "V. T." twice repeated, once upside down, & that was surrounded by the words "Val de Travers Etat." Appets. disclaimed practically all the letter press; therefore the only essential particular of the mark was the cross device. There was on the register a mark belonging to a co., with which appets. were already in litigation, which involved all these disclaimed matters without the word "Etat" & also what might be a cross—that is to say, it was clearly a cross device looked at from one direction, though it might be a dagger if looked at from the other. The registrar, therefore refused to register this

g. —.]—The word "Sarilla" was sought to be registered as a trade mark in respect of mineral & aerated waters, natural & artificial, including ginger beer. The application was opposed on the ground that the word was not an invented word, but merely a variation of the word "Sarsaparilla," a well-known beverage, & that it had reference to the character or quality of the goods to which it applied.—Held: the word "Sarilla" was not an invented word, it had reference to the character or quality of some of the goods to which it was to be applied, & therefore application to register was refused.—SCHWEPPES, LTD. v. ROWLANDS (E.) PROPRIETARY, LTD. (1913), 16 C. L. R. 162.—AUS.

h. —.]—The words "Microbe Killer," regularly registered, constitute a valid trade mark.—ADAM v. SHAW (1897), 28 O. R. 612.—CAN.

k. —.]—A trade mark for a certain kind of yeast, consisting of a label bearing the representation of the head & bust of a woman, with the words "Day" & "Hop" on either side, & the words "Cream Yeast" below, was properly registrable & valid.—GILBERT v. LUMSDEN BROTHERS (1904), 24 C. L. T. 345; 8 O. L. R. 168; 3 O. W. R. 851.—CAN.

l. —.]—The word "self-reducing" as applied to the manufacture & sale of women's corsets is descriptive, & does not constitute a good trade mark.—KOPS BROTHERS v. DOMINION CORSET CO. (1913), 15 Exch. C. R. 18.—CAN.

m. —.]—"Sure-crop" or "Shur-crop," as applied to fertilizers, are ordinary words descriptive of the quality of the article, incapable of acquiring a secondary meaning, & not registrable as a valid trade mark, & should be expunged from the Register.

mark on the ground that it was calculated to deceive, because both marks would tend to cause the goods to be sold as "cross brand." From this decision appcts. appealed. On the hearing it was further urged against their appeal that by virtue of an agreement dated Dec. 24, 1907, appcts. had disposed of all their rights until the year 1925 to resps. to sell their goods in this country, & that, therefore they had no goods which could be sold or used in the United Kingdom to which the trade mark sought to be registered could be applied:—Held: the registrar's decision must be affirmed & the appeal dismissed. The fact that appcts. had never had any trade or business in this country with reference to these goods, or could have until 1925, made their application to register a trade mark now too remote.—Re NEUCHATEL ASPHALTE Co.'s TRADE MARK, [1913] 2 Ch. 291; 82 L. J. Ch. 414; 108 L. T. 966; 29 T. L. R. 505; 57 Sol. Jo. 611.

SUB-SECT. 2.—NAME OF COMPANY, INDIVIDUAL, OR FIRM.

See Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (1).

7. Name of company—Written as signature.—In ordinary handwriting.—The name of a co. is not "represented in a special or particular manner" within Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, by the fact that it is written, like a signature, in more or less ordinary handwriting, & is not, when so written, registrable as a trade mark.—Re BRITISH MILK PRODUCTS Co.'s APPLICATION, [1915] 2 Ch. 202; 84 L. 10. Name of firm—Set out in distinctive manner.—In combination with name in foreign characters.—The name of the firm of applts. & the address "Levenbank" are added, & . . . the name of the firm . . . in Hindostanee. Prima facie these figures . . ., would appear to me, with the name & address of the firm added, to constitute in each case a distinctive device, within the meaning of the Act, & thus to be a trade mark authorised to be registered under the Act (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—*ORR EWING v. in their business of dealers in wines & spirits. They registered the signature of "Macfarlane & Co." as their trade mark, No. 204,384. During the year 1899 the trade, nominally carried on by plfts., was extended to England. Plfts., when the respective trades of the parties came into collision, brought this action to restrain defts. from using the name "Macfarlane & Co.," so as to represent their whisky as that of plfts. Order for particulars of defts.' advertising, etc., made.

Plfts. also moved to rectify the Register of Trade Marks by removing defts.' mark "Macfarlane & Co.," No. 204,384:—Held: plfts. had failed to prove that defts.' acts had intercepted or were calculated to intercept plfts.' trade. The action was dismissed with costs.

In 1893 letters patent were granted to P., on a communication from S., for the substance "Formalin," which was described as being a water-white liquid of pungent odour & containing 40 per cent. of pure formaldehyde combined with 60 per cent. of water. The F. co. subsequently became possessed of the patent, & were appointed sole agents in Great Britain for S. In 1898, the F. co. applied for registration of the word "Formalin" as a trade mark. The registrar of trade marks, acting for the Comptroller-General, refused the application, & applts. appealed:—Held: appcts. had no title to apply for the registration of the word "Formalin," & the name of a patented substance would not be registered as a trade mark for such substance as manufactured & sold by appcts., & the word "formalin" did not connote the manufacture of appct.'s assignors.—Re FORMALIN HYGIENIC Co., LTD.'s APPLICATION (1900), 17 R. P. C. 486.

—A tea dealer registered the word "Mazawatee" as trade mark for tea & other articles of food under the Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 & 1888. The tea was mostly imported from Ceylon, & the word registered was compounded of "maza," which means relish in Hindustani, & "wattee," which means an estate in Cingalese; but the compound word had no meaning in either language. There was no estate in Ceylon named "Mazawatee":—Held: on an application to expunge the trade mark, the word "Mazawatee" was a good trade mark, being a fancy word under Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 37), & an invented word under the Act of 1888, having no reference to the quality of the goods, & not being a geographical name.—*Re DENSHAM'S TRADE MARK, [1895] 2 Ch. 176; 64 L. 27. Composed from geographical name & surname.—Word similar to geographical name & surname.]—An application was made for registration in class 40 of a trade mark consisting of the word "Stanwal." At the hearing the Registrar of trade marks held that the word resembled in pronunciation & appearance the word "Stanwell," a surname & the name of a place & that it also resembled in pronunciation & appearance the word "Standwell" often used in referring to goods. The application was refused on the grounds that the word was not an invented word & was not distinctive within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, & also in the exercise of the Registrar's discretion. Appcts. appealed to the ct. In an affidavit filed on their behalf it was stated that the word "Stanwal" had been invented by deponent by combining the first letters of the first word in appcts.' name & of the place, Walpole, in which their business premises were situated & that the word had no reference to, & was not connected with the name of any person or the place Stanwell or the words "Stand well":—Held: the word was an invented word within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (3), & was not a geographical name or a surname but was only like a geographical name or a surname & was not calculated to cause confusion.—*Re STANDARD WOVEN FABRIC CO.'S APPLICATION (1918), 35 R. T. in 1886 registered as a trade mark in respect of the same class of goods a label of which the distinctive part was the word "Emolliololum," & he described his manufacture as a fluid preparation for rendering certain specified articles made of leather, & every description of leather, thoroughly waterproof & supple. V. & P. moved for the rectification of the register by expunging T.'s mark. The evidence did not satisfy the ct. that any one had been deceived by the similarity of the two marks:—Held: (1) the word "Emolliololum" would convey to the mind of an ordinary Englishman that the substance designated by it would act by softening the articles to which it was to be applied, & was consequently descriptive. It was not, therefore, a "fancy word" within the meaning of Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 64 (1) (c), nor an invented word, or a word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods, within Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1888 (c. 50), s. 10 (1) (d) (e), & the registration of T.'s mark could not be justified; (2) inasmuch as V. & P. might in the future development of their trade wish to apply the name "Emolliololum" to some substance made by them, in which the existence of T.'s mark on the register might interfere with them, they were "persons aggrieved," within the meaning of sect. 90 of the Act of 1883, by its entry on the register.—Re TALBOT'S TRADE MARK (1894), 63 L. The word was invented by taking the first syllable of Kynoch & adding the termination "ite," which is a common termination for explosives. The Comptroller refused registration on the ground that the word was capable of having reference to the character or quality of the goods. It appeared that there was in existence a word "Kainite," which was the name of a mineral substance, & also "Kinelite," the name of an explosive. It was also suggested that the word might be taken to have a reference to the root of "kinetic":—Held: "Kynite" was an invented word, & had no

33. ——The F. co. in 1890 registered, the word "Savonol" as a Trade Mark for soft soap, etc. Deft. co. began to use "Savoline" for soap. The F. co. brought an action for infringement of trade mark & passing off, & the W. co. gave notice of motion to expunge the trade mark from the Register. It was directed that the motion to rectify should come on with the trial of the action. At the trial defts. contended that "Savonol" was not an invented word & ought to be expunged from the Register, & that, even if it remained on the Register, defts., in what they were doing, were not infringing, & that their goods could not be passed off for plfts.'—Held: "Savonol" was an invented word, & the motion to rectify must be dismissed with costs, & plfts. were entitled to an injunction & other relief, & also to a certificate that the validity of the trade mark had come in question in the action. 36. —[.]—In May, 1905, P. registered, as a trade mark, under Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 (c. 57), & 1888 (c. 50), the word "Diabolo" in respect of tops. The word was not then a word current in the English language, but was to be found in some Italian dictionaries as a variant for "diavolo." The top in respect of which the mark was registered & used was a double-coned one which was adopted to be rotated by a cord attached to two flexible rods, the top & the rotatory apparatus forming the means of playing a game which with some improvements was a revival of a game played about the beginning of the nineteenth century, in France called "le diable" or "le jeu au diable" & in England "the devil on two sticks":—Held: as the word "Diabolo" was such as to suggest to ordinary minds, & selected so to suggest, the devil or something in which the devil played a part, it was not an invented word or a word having no reference to the quality or character of the goods, & was not a registrable trade mark & must be removed from the register of trade marks.

Qu.: whether the word was not also open to objection because it was not at the date of registration used or proposed to be used to indicate that the goods to which it applied were the goods of the person asking for registration.—*PHILIPPART v. 37. —[.]—A word not being an invented word ought not to be put on the register if the spelling is phonetic & resembles in sound a word which in its proper spelling could not be put on the register.

An application was made to expunge from the register several trade marks consisting of the word "Orlwoola" registered under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 & 1888, for, amongst other things, woollen goods, with a disclaimer in each case of the words "all wool." These marks had been extensively used for many years in connection with unshrinkable woollen goods:—Held: "Orlwoola" was merely a misspelling of "all wool"; if the goods to which the word was applied were entirely composed of wool the word was descriptive, & if not, was deceptive; & the trade marks were not registrable either under the Act of 1905 or under the previous Acts & ought to be expunged.—*Re BROCK (H. (2) The word "Parlograph" is capable of registration as a trade mark under class 8 in respect of sound-recording & reproducing machines & parts & accessories thereof.

A German co., which had already registered the word "Parlograph" as its trade mark in several foreign countries, in connection with sound-recording & reproducing machines & the like, applied for registration of the word as its trade mark in England. A pamphlet was in evidence, issued by an English co., which was the sole agent in the United Kingdom for sale of the German co.'s goods, which described, under the name "Parlograph," a sound-recording machine thereby offered for sale in the United Kingdom:—Held: the word sufficiently indicated that it was to be used in connection with articles produced by apprets. to come within the definition of "trade mark" in s. 3 of the Act of 1905.—Re CARL LINDSTROM AKT.'S TRADE MARK, [1914] 2 Ch. 103; 83 L. The Registrar refused the application on the ground that the word was not an invented word, & that, if it were, it had a direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, which might or might not be a true one, & that it should, in the exercise of his discretion, be refused:—Held: it was doubtful whether "Arsenoid" was an invented word, but the Registrar had exercised his discretion, & there was no reason to differ from him.—Re YALDING MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1916), 33 R. The application was refused.

Even if a mark is an invented word, that does not preclude the considerations at the opposition stage of the question whether or not its use would be liable to lead to confusion or deception under sect. 11, & it is open to the registrar to refuse the mark under his discretion under sect. 12.—Re SALTER'S APPLICATION (1923), 40 R. ram" in classes 8 & 1 for photographic cameras & films respectively, the relative dates of registration varying in the different cases. Under these names & certain abbreviations of the same they were selling cameras & rolls of appropriate films. Defts. were selling rolls of films not of pltfs.' manufacture which were catalogued & advertised in various ways as "Kodak film," "Brownie film," & so on, & it was proved that customers at their shops had been supplied with films not of pltfs.' manufacture in response to written & verbal orders for "Kodak film," "film for a Kodak," & so on. In actions brought for injunctions to restrain infringement & passing-off defts. contended that the expressions "Kodak film," "Brownie film," "No. 3 F.P.K. film," "No. 1 Brownie film," & the like, whatever their original signification might have been, had come to mean & were understood by the trade & the public as now meaning simply films of any kind or make so long only as they would fit the particular camera; & they moved to rectify the Register by the removal therefrom of the trade marks as registered for the accessories in class 1, mainly on the ground that the words were descriptive of the respective cameras for which the films were of the appropriate sizes. The word "Panoram" as registered in class 8 for cameras was also attacked as being descriptive & having reference to the character or quality of the goods, but pltfs. admitted that this word must be removed from the Register in each class:—Held: (1) pltfs. had clearly established that the descriptions & letters in question meant their films & no others; defts. had wholly failed to establish that the same descriptions & letters referred to sizes only, irrespective of origin, & defts. must therefore be restrained by injunction from making & selling films in such a way as to lead to the belief that their films were of pltfs.' manufacture; (2) "Kodak" was an invented word referring exclusively to pltfs.' goods, & was applied to their cameras & films substantially about the same time; "Brownie" & "Bullseye" were words having no real reference to the character or quality of the goods & were applied by pltfs. simultaneously to new patterns of cameras & to films; & the motion to rectify therefore failed except as regarded the word "Panoram," which must be removed from the Register in respect of both cameras & films.—*KODAK, LTD. v. that the word had reference to the quality or character of the goods. The Registrar of Trade Marks in an affidavit referred to the use of the word in a commendatory sense, & especially in certain registered trade marks, the right to the exclusive use of it in those applied for since 1888 having been disclaimed: he also stated that registration of the word had been frequently refused:—Held: having regard to the fact that the word had often been refused, the Comptroller's discretion should not be overruled.—Re PRINTING MACHINERY Co.'s APPLICATION (1905), 23 R. 53. —.]—The Ct. has jurisdiction under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), to permit registration of words having a direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, as well as geographical terms, but it is for appct. to prove that words primâ facie unsuitable for registration have acquired distinctiveness, & the extent to which the ct. will require the proof of this acquired distinctiveness to go will depend upon the character of the word. In determining whether a word primâ facie descriptive ought to be admitted to registration as a trade mark the ct. ought to consider whether the registration will cause substantial difficulty or confusion in view of the provision in s. 44 that no registration shall interfere with the use by any person of any bonâ fide description of the character or quality of his goods.

A special application to register the words "California Syrup of Figs" for an aperient medicine was referred by the Board of Trade to the ct. The word was a known chemical term which indicated that the substance to which the word was applied contained two amine groups, but it was used by appcts. for their dyes, whether they contained one, two, or more amine groups or no amine group at all:—Held: the word was not distinctive within the meaning of the sub-sect., because it was descriptive, & because it was used deceptively, & the application ought not to be allowed to proceed.

62. —.]—In 1904 the Pacific Heating Electric Co. was incorporated in America & in 1912 the name was changed to the Hotpoint Electric Heating Co. The co. manufactured electrically heated irons & electric cooking & heating apparatus. Trade in these articles under the mark "Hotpoint" had commenced in the United Kingdom in about 1909, the trade was at first small but it increased from 1914 to 1916 when it was interfered with by the war. Roughly two-thirds of the value of the trade was in respect of heating irons. In Nov. 1908, Letters Patent for "Improvements in Electrically Heating Apparatus especially applicable to Flat Irons" were granted to William Eastman & Alan Warne who assigned their interest therein to Eastman & Sons (Dyers & Cleaners), Ltd., & thereafter this co. & Alan Warne carried on in co-partnership the business of the manufacture & sale of electric irons made in accordance with the patent. A characteristic of these irons was that they were heated at the point, & they were sold under the name "Hot-Point." The business was subsequently transferred to another co. which continued to describe the irons as "Hot-Point." The American co. had objected to the use of the mark by Eastman & Warne in 1910, but took no further action, & the English firm continued to use the description "Hotpoint" in connection with irons without interference. In Jan. 1917, the Hotpoint Electric Heating Co. made a special application under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), to register the mark "Hotpoint" as a trade mark in Class 13 for "electric appliances for heating, cooking, washing & cleaning purposes, all being metal goods not included in other classes." In 1918 an amalgamation took place in America of the Hotpoint Electric Heating Co., & two other cos. under the name of the Edison Electric Appliance co., but the goodwill of the Hotpoint co. in Canada & the United Kingdom was not transferred. After the amalgamation the goods for which the trade mark was applied were manufactured by the Edison Electric Appliance co. The application to register was referred to the ct., the Eastman co. & Eastman & Warne being included as resps. At the hearing appcts. agreed to exclude from their application "Irons for Industrial, Domestic, & Laundry Use, & Soldering & Branding Irons":—Held: the word "Hotpoint" had reference to the character of the goods but it had become distinctive of appcts.' electrical appliances, other than irons, in respect of which registration had been sought; the word was so descriptive of irons that, even if appcts. had not abandoned their application for these goods, it would have been difficult to contend that it had become distinctive; the fact that there might be confusion in the minds of some people who buy irons was no ground for refusing to allow registration of a mark which had become distinctive of appcts.' goods in respect of the other appliances; & under the circumstances the mark was not calculated to deceive by reason of the change of manufacture, the Hotpoint Electric Heating co. & the Edison Electric Appliance co. being in truth the same persons under a different name.—Re HOTPOINT ELECTRIC HEATING CO.'S APPLICATION (1921), 38 R. 63. —.]—An application was made by persons interested in the perfumery trade to remove from the Register a trade mark consisting of the word "Rosette" registered in Class 48 for face powder, not medicated, on the ground that the registration conflicted with the principle which had generally been accepted for many years, namely that the name of a flower or plant should not be allowed registration as a trade mark by one member of the perfumery trade, in respect of perfume, that the word "Rosette" meant a little rose, & consequently came within the principle, & as the registration was calculated to injure & embarrass members of the perfumery trade, the mark should be removed from the Register:—Held: while the word "Rosette" in the strict sense means a little rose, so far as the English use is concerned, it is not primarily or even generally used in this sense, but in the sense of a little decoration of silk or paper somewhat resembling a rose in general shape. The application to remove the mark was consequently refused, but in view of the fact that registration was mainly justified by reason of the evidence of long user, & distinctiveness the mark was transferred to Part B of the Register.—Re WERTHEIMER ET FILS TRADE MARK (1924), 41 R. The application was refused on the ground that the word had direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, that it had not obtained any distinctiveness by use in Great Britain & that it did not satisfy the requirements of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, & that it contravened s. 11 of the Act:—Held: there was no evidence before the Registrar that the mark was distinctive; the word "Wetordry" had direct reference to the character or quality of the goods; & the Registrar was right in refusing the application.—Re MINNESOTA MINING & MANUFACTURING CO.'S APPLICATION (1924), 41 R. Pltfs. registered seventeen of these combinations of letters as their trade marks. In an action to prevent the infringement of these registered trade marks:—Held: pltfs. had established their right to the exclusive use of these combinations of letters, which were valid trade marks, notwithstanding that they were also indicative of the pattern & quality of the goods to which they were applied.—*RANSOME v. SUB-SECT. 6.—ANY OTHER DISTINCTIVE MARK.

A. In General.

See Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5); Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), s. 2 (2).

66. Meaning of distinctive.]—BANHAM (GEORGE) & Co. v. REDDAWAY (F.) & Co., No. 337, post.

67. Meaning of "capable of distinguishing"—Distinguished from "adapted to distinguish."]—(1) A fancy word capable of being distinctive is not disqualified for registration as a trade mark merely because it is also descriptive in the sense of suggesting some quality of the goods.

(2) The expression "capable of distinguishing" in Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), s. 2 (2), has a somewhat wider import than the expression "adapted to distinguish" in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 2, as interpreted by the authorities, in that it embraces marks which have not at the date of the application to register, but which, if used long enough, may thereafter, become distinctive of the goods of the proprietor of the mark.

(3) Upon an application under s. 2 of the Act of 1919 for registration in Part B of the register of trade marks of a mark which has been in actual use for two years it is not necessary for appct. to prove that the mark has actually become distinctive. It is sufficient for him to satisfy the registrar that it is not incapable of becoming distinctive.

The pltf. having for more than two years used the marks "Davis' Ustikon" & "Ustikon" to indicate that rubber soles for boots were of his manufacture, applied for & obtained registration of the two trade marks in Part B of the register under s. 2 of the Act of 1919. At a time when "Ustikon" applied to goods indicated both to the trade & to the public that the goods were manufactured by pltf. defts. used the word

"Justickon" to place on their rubber soles. In an action by pltf. for infringement & passing off & on a motion by defts. to rectify the register by removing pltf.'s marks:—Held: (1) the mark "Ustikon" was at the time of its registration capable of distinguishing, & did in fact distinguish, pltf.'s goods, & was therefore rightly placed on the register; (2) defts.' mark "Justickon" was an infringement of pltf.'s mark "Ustikon"; there was a likelihood of deception owing to the close resemblance of the two words, & pltf. was therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain defts. from using their mark "Justickon."—Re DAVIS'S TRADE MARKS, DAVIS v. SUSSEX RUBBER CO., [1927] 2 Ch. 345; 97 L. J. Ch. 8; 137 L. T. 714; 44 R. P. C. 412, C. A.

68. Claim for registration as distinctive mark—Whether other essential particulars required.]—

(1) Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (1-5), are separate & distinct, & the expression "any other distinctive mark" in sub-sect. 5 means a distinctive mark other than the mark designated in sub-sects. 1 to 4. Therefore, when a mark is claimed to be registrable under sub-sect. 5, the only essential particular which sect. 9 requires is that it should be distinctive, & there is nothing in the sect. which requires that the mark should also contain one or more of the essential particulars designated in sub-sects. 1 to 4.

(2) Qu.: whether the fact that the user of a trade mark in a foreign country has rendered the mark in fact distinctive in that country ought to be taken into consideration.—Re DIAMOND T MOTOR CAR CO., [1921] 2 Ch. 583; 90 L. J. Ch. 508; 126 L. T. 87; 66 Sol. Jo. (W. R.) 8; 38 R. P. C. 373.

Loss of right to registration as distinctive—Use of additional mark—Additional mark indicating foreign source of goods.]—(1) A "special & distinctive word" used in the definition of a trade mark in Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10, means a word which distinguishes the goods to which it is attached as goods made or sold by the owner of the mark; & by using some additional words so as to induce the general public, as distinguished from persons in the secrets of the particular trade who would not be deceived, to believe that goods so marked are of foreign brand & manufacture, the inventor of the original word is precluded from saying that such word is distinctive of his own manufacture so as to be capable of registration as his trade mark. In 1876, A. registered as his trade mark the word "Eton," which had been used since 1869 & become known in the trade as denoting cigarettes of his manufacture. He had also been in the habit of selling, & supplying for the purposes of sale, "Eton" cigarettes in boxes so labelled, in conformity with an alleged custom in the trade, as to imply that such cigarettes were manufactured at St. Petersburg by a Russian firm:—Held: A., by so acting in connection with the word "Eton" as to suggest to persons not in the trade that the cigarettes were not of his making, had destroyed the value of the word as a "special & distinctive" within Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10, & accordingly that at the time of registration it had ceased to be his special & distinctive mark capable of registration; (2) as five years on the register does not (on the authorities) give an indefeasible title to a mark which, from not properly constituting a trade mark within the meaning of the Act, ought not to have been registered, A.'s action to restrain an infringement of the mark by B. was dismissed, & rectification of the register by removing the mark on B.'s application allowed.

(3) The word or words must distinguish the product of the person claiming the trade mark from the product of all other persons; & it appears to me that it must have that distinctive character at the time of registration. Then there is a further requisite that such distinctive word or words must have been used as a trade mark before the passing of the Act (FRY, L.J.).—*Re WOOD'S TRADE-MARK, WOOD v. Appets. were an American co. with factories at Oswego, in New York State. There was evidence to show that they had sold Oswego corn flour for many years in this country, that there was no other corn flour known by the name "Oswego," that their corn flour was known to the public as "Oswego" without the use of their name, & that the name "Oswego" was known in this country through its association with their goods rather than as a geographical name. There were on the register five other trade marks in class 42 containing the word "Oswego." Three of these belonged to appets. & two to biscuit manufacturers who did not oppose the present application:—Held: the only question now before the ct. was whether "Oswego" was adapted to distinguish the corn flour of appets. from the corn flour of other persons; the ct. had not to consider whether registration of "Oswego" might lead to confusion between appets.' corn flour & similar goods, such as oatmeal, of other persons; the ct. had power to take into consideration evidence of actual user of the trade mark, & on the evidence in the present case there must be a declaration that "Oswego" ought to be deemed a distinctive mark in respect of corn flour.—Re NATIONAL STARCH CO.'S APPLICATION, [1908] 2 Ch. 698;

81. ———.]—(1) A preliminary order of the Board of Trade or the ct. under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), directing the Registrar of trade marks to proceed with an application to register a surname as a trade mark merely enables the application to proceed as if it were an ordinary & not a special application, & is in no way final or conclusive so as to prevent the Registrar from subsequently refusing the application for registration on its merits, or to preclude the ct. upon an application, after registration, by a person aggrieved under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 35, from expunging the entry on the ground that the trade mark is not in fact distinctive.

(2) A surname is not necessarily incapable of being a registrable trade mark. It may be registered, for instance, where it is an uncommon name & its user has been so extensive that it has in fact become distinctive, within Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, for the goods with respect to which it is registered or proposed to be registered. Applications to register surnames ought, however, to be closely scrutinised, & registration only permitted where the distinctive character of the mark is clearly proved.

Teofani & Co., Ltd., & their predecessors in business had for more than twenty years traded in London as tobacco & cigarette manufacturers, & during that period had used the name "Teofani" as a trade mark to an extent which, in the opinion of the ct., made it in fact "distinctive" for cigarettes. The name was uncommon, there being only one person, A. Teofani, in the United Kingdom who bore it besides the predecessors in business of the co. In 1909 the co. obtained an order of the Board of Trade under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. 5, for the registration of the name "Teofani" as a trade mark.

On appeal from the refusal of the judge on the application of A. Teofani, to order the removal of the mark from the Register:—Held: the mark was properly registered.

(3) Pltfs., Teofani & Co., Ltd., & their predecessors in business had for many years manufactured & sold cigarettes as "Teofani's cigarettes," under which description they had become well known to the trade & the public. In 1909 pltfs. caused the name "Teofani" to be registered as their trade mark. In 1911 def., Athanasius Teofani, commenced to make & sell cigarettes under the description of "A. Teofani's cigarettes."

In an action to restrain passing off & infringement of pltfs.' trade mark the judge granted an injunction restraining def. from selling or offering for sale cigarettes as "A. Teofani's cigarettes" or otherwise marking his goods with the name "Teofani," either with or without other names, without clearly distinguishing such cigarettes from those of pltfs., & from infringing the trade mark:—Held: the injunction was rightly granted.

(4) Within the period of seven years limited by Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 35, from the date of the original registration of a trade mark, it is open to any aggrieved person to apply to rectify the Register by the removal of a mark complained of, & the ct. has jurisdiction to hear the application, & reverse any order for registration made by the Board of Trade.—*TEOFANI & CO., LTD. v. "Muratti" in class 45 in respect of cigarettes. The application was referred by the Board of Trade to the ct. Appets. filed a great number of affidavits in support of their application made by traders from all parts of the United Kingdom, showing extensive user of the name for a very long period. It appeared from the exhibits that the name "Muratti" had been used by appets. on the cigarettes, boxes, show cards, & advertisements, but in some cases the name appeared as "Muratti's." The application was opposed by the Comptroller-General, who contended that the name had not been used as a trade mark & was not distinctive:—Held: on the evidence, the name had been used as a trade mark; it was a very peculiar & uncommon name, & it should be deemed to be distinctive.—*Re MURATTI (B.), SONS & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1915), 32 R. They applied under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), to register that name as a Trade Mark in class 22 in respect of motor vehicles. Two other cos. had for some time past sold in this country cars manufactured abroad. These two cos. both used the name "Daimler" in their titles, but always in combination with other words & never separately or as the initial word. They did not oppose the application to register, & one of them was in course of being wound up under the war legislation. The Board of Trade required appets. to apply by motion to the High Ct. The application was referred to the ct., & appets. adduced evidence to show that from 1908 onwards they had used the word "Lodge" as a trade mark for sparking plugs. It was objected on behalf of the Registrar of Trade Marks that the word was a surname & was not one that should be registered; also that it denoted a patented article:—Held: appets. had established user of the word since 1908, as a trade mark, & not as the name of a patented article, & the name, although not particularly rare, was not a common one.—*Re LODGE SPARKING PLUG CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1918), 35 R. In July, 1919, they made two special applications for the registration of the surname "Eno" as a trade mark (a) in class 3 in respect of fruit salt being a medicinal preparation, & (b) in class 42 in respect of a dry preparation for making a non-intoxicating beverage. Appets. desired to be heard by the ct. & gave notice of motion accordingly. It appeared that "Eno" was a very rare surname, & the evidence showed that appets. had long used the name "Eno" as a trade mark, & that the public frequently asked for the preparation as "Eno." On the motions coming on for hearing by the ct.:—Held: "Eno" was a word adapted to distinguish the appets.' goods & was therefore distinctive.—Re ENO'S APPLICATIONS (1919), 37 R. P. C. 1.

83 iv. ———.—J.—The only essential prerequisite for the registration of a surname as a trade mark in terms of Act 9, 1916, s. 99, is proof that it is distinctive. being later changed to "Winget, Ltd." for the purpose of, among other things, carrying on business as manufacturers of concrete mixing & moulding machines. The business had become an extensive one. There had formerly been a co. in America called "The Winget Concrete Machine Co.," but this co. had no business in the United Kingdom, & had in fact long ceased to exist. In Feb. 1918, Winget, Ltd., made a special application under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. 5, to register the name "Winget" as a trade mark in class 6, in respect of machinery & parts of machinery for mixing & moulding concrete & similar material, & asked to have the application heard by the ct. It appeared that Winget was a surname, though a very rare one. The motion coming on for hearing, it was ordered, appets. being willing & offering to file an affidavit as to the non-user of the name "Winget" in America in connection with the class of goods in question, that the Registrar proceed with the application.—RE WINGET'S APPLICATION (1919), 36 R. In 1918, they made a special application to register the surname "Avery" as a trade mark in class 6, in respect of weighing machines, & applied to the ct. for an order under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. 5. Appets.' business was by far the largest of its kind in the United Kingdom, the annual turnover exceeding £1,000,000. It appeared from the evidence that the name "Avery" had for several years past been used alone on all the weights & on a substantial proportion of all the machines manufactured by appets.; & that the name "Avery," though not uncommon, was recognised throughout the trade & by the public as denoting appets.' goods:—Held: in the special circumstances & in view of the evidence, the name "Avery" was adapted to distinguish appets.' goods from those of all other persons.—RE AVERY (W. & T.), LTD.'S APPLICATION (1919), 36 R. 92. ————]—H. G. Burford & Co., Ltd., were an English co. incorporated in 1915, & occupied since then in the sale in this country of commercial motor vehicles manufactured in the United States of America. In Feb. 1918, they made a special application to the Board of Trade under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), for the registration of the word "Burford" in script type in class 22 in respect of commercial motor vehicles, the word "Burford" being both a surname & a geographical name.

The Board of Trade referred the matter to the ct. The word "Burford" had been selected & used by appets. as being the surname of the founder of the business in the United States, who was also largely interested in the co. Appets. adduced evidence to prove that the word "Burford" when used in connection with commercial motor vehicles, denoted vehicles of their manufacture. The user of the name had extended over about three & a half years, during which time between 400 & 500 of such vehicles had been sold in this country:—Held: (1) on the evidence the name "Burford" was distinctive in the United Kingdom of appets.' commercial motor vehicles, not only to persons connected with the motor trade, but also to buyers & users of, & to persons interested in such vehicles; (2) having regard to appets.' business & to the rapid growth of their trade, the high reputation which their goods had already acquired, & the wide area over which that reputation extended, the fact that the user of the name had only extended over the short period of three & a half years was not a sufficient ground for refusing registration; (3) length of user was important only in considering the question of fact whether a name mark had become distinctive of appets.' goods; therefore the application to register ought to be directed to proceed.—RE BURFORD (H. G.) & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION, [1919] 2 Ch. 28; 88 L. J. (Ch. 186; 120 L. T. 591; 35 T. L. R. 319; 63 Sol. Jo. 409; 36 R. P. C. 139, C. A.

They applied under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. 5, for registration of that name in class 22 in respect of commercial motor vehicles & applied to the ct. for an order under that paragraph:—Held: appets. had established that the name "Thornycroft" had acquired a distinctiveness entitling them to proceed with registration.—RE THORNYCROFT'S APPLICATION (1920), 37 R. 94. ————]—Crossley Brothers, Ltd., who were the successors in business of Crossley Brothers, who commenced business in co-partnership in 1866 made two special applications to register the word "Crossley" as a trade mark in class 6 in respect of gas & oil engines & in class 18 in respect of gas generating plant. The applications were referred to the ct., & appets. adduced evidence to show that they or their predecessors had manufactured gas engines since 1870, oil engines since 1891, & a gas generating plant since 1901, & that the word Crossley had been used as their trade mark continuously from those dates respectively. Comment was made on behalf of the Registrar of Trade Marks as to the wording of some of the declarations, but subject to this the applications were not objected to. Evidence was adduced that appets. had carried on since 1892 the business previously carried on since 1873 by F. Reddaway & Co. as manufacturers of (inter alia) machine belting, hose-piping & rubber for mechanical purposes; that the name "Reddaway" had been used since 1880, either alone or in conjunction with words indicating the manufacture of appets., or their predecessors, & in combination with their registered trade marks, & had long been recognised as indicating goods of appets.' manufacture or selection. The applications were unopposed:—Held: the name had been used as an indication of the manufacturer, & not as the name of the article; & the Registrar of Trade Marks was directed to proceed with the applications.—RE REDDAWAY (F.) & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1921), 38 R. special application to register the word "Perry" as a trade mark in class 13 in respect of free wheel clutches & driving chains for cycles. The application was referred to the ct. & appcts. who were the registered owners of many trade marks comprising the word "Perry" for pen nibs & other stationers' sundries, adduced evidence to show that, ever since 1888 & 1901 when they had commenced the manufacture of chains & free wheels respectively, they had consistently used the word "Perry" as their trade mark for those articles, & that the word was distinctive of their goods. No objection was taken on behalf of the Registrar of Trade Marks. The application was ordered to be proceeded with.—Re PERRY & Co., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1921), 38 R. P. C. 195.

97. —[.] Application was made for registration in class 9 of a Trade Mark consisting of the word "Obermeier" in respect of grand & upright pianos. Appct. had previously registered the word, but the registration had lapsed in 1921. Application was by a German firm, the successor of a firm which had originally supplied appct. with the pianos to which the mark had been attached. The successor firm had registered the word "Obermeier" in Germany. The grounds of opposition were that the mark was not capable of distinguishing appcts.' goods by reason of its being a surname & being the name of the opponents firm which had used the name "Obermeier" on pianos sold & shipped by it to Great Britain since 1905, & was so using it:—Held: the word "Obermeier" had in the past been put forward by appct. as a surname & was according to its ordinary signification a surname; distinctiveness had not been established; having regard to advertisements by appct. & the marking on the pianos, the name must have meant to purchasers a piano manufactured at a particular factory in Germany & possibly that appct. was sole agent for the sale of them in this country, the user of the word "Obermeier" thereafter in connection with pianos not of the manufacture of the opponents would be calculated to deceive.—Re WARSCHAUER'S APPLICATION (1925), 43 R. The evidence established a prima facie case of the word having become identified by user with the goods of appct. co.:—Held: the word "Pope," being for all essential purposes the surname of the manufacturer of appct. co.'s goods, was not in its nature adapted to distinguish them from the goods of other persons of the name of Pope, & could not become so adapted by user so as to be capable of registration as a trade mark under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. 5.—Re POPE'S ELECTRIC LAMP CO., LTD.'S APPLICATIONS, [1911] 2 Ch. 382; 80 L. Lea, a tobacconist, had supplied to one Boardman, a licensed victualler in Manchester, a tobacco mixture which became known & was asked for as "Boardman's" mixture. In 1868 R. J. Lea, with Boardman's sanction, began to sell this mixture to the public under a label bearing the words "Boardman's Smoking Mixture" in addition to other matter, including the name, address, & a trade mark device of R. J. Lea. This label was registered in 1887 as a whole for "tobacco being a smoking mixture." In 1910 R. J. Lea, Ltd., the successors in business of R. J. Lea, applied to register the word "Boardman's" under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), as a trade mark in respect of manufactured tobacco. There was evidence that, in a limited market among persons who knew & liked the mixture, it was known & spoken of as "Boardman's," & that the word had been used as a trade mark in connection with goods for the purpose of indicating that they were the goods of appcts. The application having been referred to the ct. by the Board of Trade, it was dismissed by the judge on the ground (inter alia) that a mere surname of an individual appct., though it might be adapted to distinguish the goods of all the persons, taken collectively, who bore that surname from the goods of other persons bearing a different surname, was not adapted to distinguish the goods of the appct. from those of other persons within the meaning of that expression in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), & ought not, therefore, to be registered under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5):—Held: on the evidence the word "Boardman's" was not "adapted to distinguish" the goods of the appcts. from those of other dealers in tobacco, & was not therefore registrable as a "distinctive mark" within Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5).—*Re LEA (R. Slazengers, Ltd., were the successors in business of a firm called Slazenger & Sons. The application was referred by the Board of Trade to the ct. when registration was asked for of "Slazenger." Appcts. filed evidence with a view to show the user of the name on their goods for many years, & that their goods had become identified with the name:—Held: there was no evidence of the actual use of "Slazenger" as a trade mark, & independently of actual use, there was not sufficient evidence to satisfy the ct. that the name was "adapted to distinguish" appcts.' goods.—Re SLAZENGERS, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1914), 31 R. 101. — — — —[.]—In 1922, the Robert Bosch Akt., a German co. which had succeeded Robert Bosch in the business of manufacturing magnetos & other electrical units at S. Germany, applied to register the surname "Bosch" as a trade mark in classes 6 & 13 in respect of magnetos & certain other electrical units. The applications were opposed by the American Bosch Magneto corp'n. on the grounds that the name "Bosch" was not distinctive, & was calculated to deceive by reason of its having been used by the opponents both separately & as a part of their corporate title. The applications were allowed. The opponents appealed to the ct. & the motion was heard with witnesses. It was not contested by opponents that at the outbreak of war the name "Bosch" had been distinctive of appct.'s goods, but it was contended that, by reason of circumstances existing during & since the war, the meaning of the name had been changed, & that appcts. had by their conduct acknowledged & contributed to that change. Some years prior to the war with the assent of Robert Bosch a co. had been formed in America for the purpose of distributing the German "Bosch" products; that co. had also manufactured magnetos, etc., & evidence was given that it had been the policy of the co. to lead the American public to believe that the products marketed by it were of American origin. In 1918, the American Custodian of Alien Property took possession of that co.'s assets, which were subsequently sold by the custodian to the opponent corp'n. which was entirely independent of Robert Bosch & his concerns. Prior to the war there had been an English co. dealing in German "Bosch" products which had been taken over by the English Custodian, who had sold its assets. On the outbreak of war appcts.' exports to this country had ceased. During & subsequent to the war period a very considerable quantity of magnetos & other electric units bearing the name "Bosch" either alone or in combination with other words have been imported into this country from America either as units or as parts of cars, lorries, etc. In 1920 appcts. recommenced to export their products to this country, & marked their products with the name Robert Bosch, & with a trade mark consisting of an armature in a circle; they also advertised widely that all genuine Stuttgart goods were so marked:—Held: in order to succeed appcts. must prove that at the date of the applications substantially all people dealing with the goods in question recognised the name "Bosch" as meaning, & meaning only, appcts.' goods; in the period 1914–1922 at least as many "Bosch" units had been imported into this country from America as there had been from Germany; in view of such importations & of appcts.' extensive warnings as to the manner in which their goods were marked, it was impossible to say that at the date of the applications the name "Bosch" was distinctive of appcts.' goods; the provisions of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), ss. 22, 39, 41 & 44, did not assist appcts.; the facts were not such as to justify registration on the ground of concurrent user, the case was not one for allowing registration subject to limitations as to the mode or place of user; & the appeal should be allowed.—*Re BOSCH APT. J. & co. in defence alleged & proved that these towels had been manufactured & sold to them under the name of Osman by H. in 1881, & had been manufactured & sold by them from 1882 down to the present time as "Osman's" & that the towels so manufactured by H. & by them had been publicly sold by H. & other firms. Pltf.'s case was that they had arranged with H. to discontinue manufacturing these towels, & that they were not aware of any manufacture by defts. themselves, although they had procured "Osman" towels from defts., believing them to be part of H.'s stock. Defts. had also from time to time purchased Osman towels from pltf's. Defts. moved to rectify the Register of Trade Marks by expunging the word "Osman" from the registered Trade Mark:—Held: "Osman" denoted a particular towel of pltf.'s manufacture & not the name of the towel by whomsoever manufactured; the word was not common to the trade & it was not proved that pltf.'s knew of deft.'s user of the word Osman on towels of deft.'s manufacture & therefore pltf.'s were entitled to register as they did in 1880. The pattern of bedstead referred to was a bedstead constructed in three parts, & had been approved by L. in 1881, when he gave verbal permission for the use of his name upon these bedsteads. There was evidence that since 1881 the name of L. had been continuously applied to bedsteads constructed on the above principle by appcts. & their predecessors, & to nothing else, & that the bedsteads had become well known to the trade generally as the L. bedsteads. Upon an application referred to the ct. by the Board of Trade for the registration of the words "Lawson Tait" as a trade mark in class 41 for bedsteads:—Held: the name "Lawson Tait" must be deemed to be a distinctive mark in respect of bedsteads of the pattern referred to in the agreement of 1898, within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & the registrar must be directed to proceed with the registration of it

In 1915 M. applied for the registration of this mark as an old mark in class 9 in respect of pianofortes. The Registrar of Trade Marks refused the application & appct. appealed by motion to the ct. Appct. also made a special application for the registration of these words as a trade mark under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & asked that this application should be heard by the ct. on the two matters coming on for hearing before the ct., it being established that this mark had become distinctive of appct.'s goods, the Registrar was directed to proceed with the second application. 111. —[—]—A co. organised under the laws of Massachusetts, U.S.A., had for many years carried on business as manufacturers of abrasive materials composed mainly of aluminium oxide. In 1900, they gave the invented name "Alundum" to their artificially produced abrasives to distinguish them from the natural product corundum. In the course of manufacture they employed a patented electric furnace, but the use of this furnace was not essential to the production of "Alundum." The co.'s goods were extensively sold in this country by selling agents. In 1907, the co. registered the name "Alundum" as a trade mark in the United States, & subsequently in other countries. In 1908, they applied in this country to register "Alundum" as a trade mark in class 50 in respect of grinding materials; this application was refused by the Registrar mainly on the ground that "Alundum" was the name of a patented article, he being misled by erroneous statements in a catalogue published by an agent of the co. In 1909, they entered into an agreement with A. & Co. of Chicago, relating to the purchase & sale by the latter of appct.'s abrasives; & by the agreement A. & Co. agreed to use appct.'s trade mark "Alundum" in conjunction with their own name on all abrasives made from "Alundum" but on no other abrasives. On May 2, 1916, appct. again applied for the registration of "Alundum" as a trade mark in class 50, in respect of abrasive materials composed substantially of aluminium oxide, but this application was also refused by the Registrar. Appct. appealed from this refusal by notice of motion to the ct. & filed evidence from which it appeared that the word "Alundum" was recognised throughout the trade as distinctive of appct.'s goods.—Held: on the evidence before the ct. "Alundum" was not a trade name or the name of a patented article, but was distinctive of appct.'s products, & this distinctiveness was not in any way limited by the agreement with A. & Co.—Re NORTON CO.'S APPLICATION (1919), 36 R. He was the registered proprietor in Switzerland & under the International Registration of a trade mark consisting of the words "Le Vampire," which was applied to his rollers. From Aug. 1926, Elaine Inescourt (afterwards Elaine de Winat) imported Freiss' rollers. The rollers were sent in cardboard boxes, the rollers & boxes bearing the words "Le Vampire" & Freiss' trading name "Le Wilma, Lausanne," & with them were supplied pamphlets bearing the words "sold by Maison Wilma, Lausanne," & "La Wilma, Lausanne." Elaine Inescourt sold the rollers in England, putting her trading name, Blanche Verlain, on the inside of the boxes, & in most cases, covering Freiss' trading name on the pamphlets with her trading name. In Dec. 1926, Elaine Inescourt registered the words "Le Vampire" in England: in Apr. 1928, Julien Freiss moved to expunge the Trade Mark from the Register.

Appct. contended that "Le Vampire" rollers meant in England his rollers, & that resp. could not acquire a title to a mark used by appct. in England; Resp. alleged that there was no user of the trade mark in England by appct., & that the trade mark denoted her merchandise exclusively:—Held: there was a user by appct. in England of the words "Le Vampire"; the trade mark was not distinctive of the goods of resp.; & the registration was made without sufficient cause, & the mark should be struck off the Register.—Re INESCOURT'S TRADE MARK (1928), 46 R. P. C. 13.

It was alleged that deft., who also carried on a millinery business, had infringed plffs.' trade mark by affixing to his premises, while in the course of erection, a board upon which there was a painted reproduction of the Duchess; that he had also exhibited the same mark upon posters & advertisements in connection with his business, & that he used boxes for delivering millinery, etc., & notepaper containing reproductions of plffs.' trade mark. Deft. alleged that he had for seven years past or thereabouts used representations of the Duchess in various ways in connection with his business as a milliner. It was proved that the picture in question had from the year 1876 been in common use in the hat & millinery trade as an ornamentation upon various papers, circulars, etc., used by milliners in their business. Plffs. had never used the trade mark on the actual goods supplied by them, but they had often used it on labels affixed to the boxes in which the goods were delivered to customers as well as on bills, receipts, etc. Deft. had used the mark which constituted the alleged infringement in a similar manner:—Held: (1) in 1892, when the trade mark was registered, it was not "distinctive" or capable of distinguishing the goods of plff. as his manufacture or selection from the goods of all other persons; it was not therefore capable of registration, & it must be expunged from the register. Semble: (2) in order to justify the removal of a trade mark from the register on the ground of non-user, it must be shown either (a) that at the date of registration there was no bonâ fide intention to use it; & that it has never in fact been used; or (b) if there was a bonâ fide intention to use & actual user for a short time, there has been actual abandonment over a long period of time.—*LOUISE & CO., LTD. v. positioned diagonally so as to form a double helix running the whole length of a cord. The application was opposed by several opponents, the grounds of opposition being that the mark was not in fact distinctive, that it was common to the trade & that its registration would preclude the opponents & other manufacturers from manufacturing cord having coloured threads as indicated in the mark which they were lawfully doing. The mark had been used in the United Kingdom by appets. since 1901, & they contended that it had become distinctive of their goods. The Registrar held the mark was not distinctive nor adapted to distinguish the goods of appets. from those of other persons & refused to register it. The Registrar refused the application on the ground that appets. had not discharged the onus of showing that the mark was free from objection & on the evidence before him, in the exercise of his discretion:—Held: the word "National," although per se registrable under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, para. (4), was prima facie a word which ought not to be allowed to be registered; without satisfactory evidence to the contrary, the word was one which would be deceptive within sect. 11; on the evidence the word was not distinctive of appets.' goods; the Registrar had exercised his discretion rightly & if it were necessary for the ct. to exercise a discretion, the ct. must exercise it in the same way.—Re NATIONAL GALVANIZERS, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1920), 36 T. Mark distinctive of particular goods—Irrespective of proprietor.—(1) A German co. who were the owners of the Apollinaris mineral water spring at Neuenahr in Rhenish Prussia, applied to register the word "Apollinaris" in England in class 44 in respect of mineral waters. There was evidence of very extensive user of the word "Apollinaris," & that it meant the water from appets.' spring & no other water. The Board of Trade having required the application to be made to the Ch. Div.:—Held: on appets. undertaking "not to use the mark except in respect of water from their property at Neuenahr or the neighbourhood thereof," the word "Apollinaris" ought to be deemed a "distinctive mark" within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & might fairly be registered under the Act.

M. applied by notice of motion to the ct. for the determination of such rights, & the matter was entered in the witness list, visà voce evidence being taken:—Held: the evidence showed that the word "Demos" in connection with fishing gut substitute had been used in a manner to identify it, not with the goods of any particular person, but with the particular article; R.'s application was refused, & M.'s application was also refused, so far as it related to fishing gut substitute; & as M. had been in the right as to the main dispute, namely, the ownership of the mark so far as it belonged to either him or R., while in general there should be no costs of the application & opposition, the taxing master should distinguish & give to M. such extra costs as should have been occasioned by R.'s claim to be the substantial owner of the business & of the trade mark so far as connected therewith.—Re DE MAID'S APPLICATION & Re ROTHCHILD'S APPLICATION (1914), 31 R. From that time they sold black lead in boxes upon which a black dome was impressed, & they imprinted a dome upon each block of black lead. This they did without regard to the shape of the blocks they sold, & there was evidence that the term "dome black lead" had become known in the trade as denoting black lead of plffs.' manufacture. In 1877 they registered a black dome as their trade mark for "black lead." Plffs. having brought an action to restrain infringement of their trade mark defts. applied to have it expunged from the Register, & PEARSON, J., ordered it to be expunged on the ground that it was only a representation of the thing sold, which thing everybody was at liberty to make, & therefore was not a good trade mark:—Held: there was no reason why a dome should not be a distinctive mark for black lead, the evidence showed it to be in fact distinctive, it was therefore capable of registration as a trade mark.—Re JAMES'S TRADE MARK, JAMES v. 136. Representation of prize medal awarded by trade exhibition.—In order to support an application for the registration of a trade mark, it must be shown, not merely that the trade mark consists of or contains an essential particular, as defined by sect. 64 of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888, but that such essential particular has been claimed as such in the application in accordance with the same sect.

An application was made by Messrs. B. & M., match makers, for an order upon the Comptroller of Trade Marks to register a label as their trade mark for "wax vestas."

The label consisted of a slip of paper intended to fold round their small boxes of matches.

The upper portion of the label had on it two representations of a prize medal, obverse & reverse, surmounting a curved fillet, with the words "Medalla de Oro," & underneath the fillet were the words "Exposicion Universal de Barcelona."

There was evidence that no other match manufacturer was using a label similarly arranged:—Held: the label was not a distinctive label within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888.—Re BRYANT & MAY, LTD. (1890), 59 L. J. Ch. 763; 63 L. T. 676.

137. Two ovals—Enclosing unregistrable description of goods.—B. registered a trade mark for corsets, consisting of two ovals, a smaller within a larger, & the words "Worth's Corsets" in ordinary type between the two. B. brought an action for infringement against T., who moved to expunge the trade mark:—Held: two ovals were not distinctive when applied to a corset, & as this was so, & as "Worth's Corsets" in ordinary type was not registrable alone as a new mark, therefore the mark must be expunged from the Register.—Re BRADLEY'S TRADE MARK (1892), 9 R. P. C. 205.

138. Initials of proprietors—Distinctive within limited area.—Motor cab proprietors in London applied for registration as trade marks for motor vehicles of two marks used by them for about three years on & in connection with their motor cabs in London. One mark consisted of the letters "W" & "G," joined by the copulative symbol "&," written in a running hand with a distorted tail to the "G" ending up under the "W." The other mark consisted of "W & G" in ordinary block letters. These marks had become in fact distinctive in the London district but not elsewhere. The Registrar refused the applications:—Held: the marks were not distinctive within the meaning of the word in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & were therefore not registrable.—TRADE MARKS REGISTRAR v. of the word "trade mark" is calculated to deceive, & whether, if it is, there is a reasonable probability of any one being injured by it.

In 1876 a label was registered as a trade mark by a firm of brewers as an "old mark," i.e., one which they had used for some years before Dec. 31, 1875. In the centre of the label was a diamond or four-sided figure, & the label was surrounded by an ornamental border. Upon the diamond was printed the word "trade mark." The firm also in 1876 registered the diamond alone as a trade mark. In 1900 a rival firm of brewers applied to have the label removed from the register, on the ground that the printing of the word "trade mark" upon the diamond was calculated to deceive, as suggesting that it alone constituted the trade mark, & that the remainder of the label might be imitated:—Held: under the circumstances the position of the word "trade mark" upon the label was not calculated to deceive; there was no reasonable probability of any one being injured by it; & there was no ground for removing the label from the register.—*Re BASS, RATCLIFFE & GRETTON, LTD. 142. — — — .] An application having been made for the registration of a device as a trade mark in class 42 in respect of gelatine for use as food or as an ingredient in food, the application was opposed by a firm of general merchants, who had used an exactly similar device in respect of tapioca & sago; but this device was not registered as a trade mark. The Registrar, acting for the Comptroller, refused the application. Appets. appealed, & the appeal was referred to the Ct. The evidence filed on the appeal showed, contrary to that before the Registrar, that the opponents had not traded in gelatine:—Held: having regard to the difference between the goods & the general circumstances, there was no reasonable probability of deception, the application for registration was accordingly ordered to be proceeded with.—*Re LEINER'S APPLICATION (1903), 20 R. 143. — — — .] The use of a Spanish brand name as part of a trade mark in connection with cigars may be, but is not necessarily, "calculated to deceive" within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 11, as containing the false suggestion that the cigars are made in Havana or some Spanish speaking country, when in fact they are made elsewhere. Each case must be judged by its own special circumstances.—Re VAN DER LEEUW'S TRADE MARK, [1912] 1 Ch. 40; 81 L. J. Ch. 100; 105 L. T. 626; 28 T. L. R. 35; 56 Sol. Jo. 53.

144. — — — .] Mark formerly used with fraudulent addition.—Removal of fraudulent addition.—A cigar merchant applied to register as new marks certain labels to be applied to tobacco, whether manufactured or unmanufactured.

Previous to the year 1887 he had used the marks on boxes of cigars in combination with the word "Habana," though the cigars were in fact of Mexican growth & manufacture. The labels also contained words implying that he was the successor in business of a certain firm of M. & co., which he was not. The marks for the registration of which application was now made, omitted the word "Habana," & substituting the true place of origin of his cigars, & his own name on the boxes, without any false addition as to previous businesses:—Held: the original fraudulent user of the marks disentitled appct. to have them registered as new marks, even though the dishonest portions were omitted, for to permit registration would in effect be enabling appct. to benefit by his former fraudulent conduct.—*Re FUENTE'S TRADE MARKS, [1891] 2 Ch. 166; 60 L. It appeared that the label had been actually used for some time with the word "Kinahan's" there inserted & that a representation had been made in appets.' price lists that it was already registered, & that appets. had done little business outside the Belfast district. The opponents, K. & Co., Ltd., trading as distillers in both Dublin & London, opposed the registration on the grounds that the term "Kinahan's Whisky" was invariably used for their whisky & meant their whisky, & that the trade mark applied for would deceive in use; that appets. in view of one of their previous registrations ought not to be allowed to cumber the Register with this mark; & that as they had misrepresented their mark as registered their application to register it ought to be refused. The Registrar decided in favour of appets. on all three grounds & allowed the application:—Held: the term "Kinahan's Whisky" had no secondary meaning signifying the opponents' whisky only, & that the proposed trade mark was not calculated to deceive; & also the conclusions of the Registrar on the other two points were sound.—*Re LYLE & KINAHAN, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1907), 24 R. included therein &, in particular, cooking ranges. The application was opposed by an Irish assocn. on the ground that the mark when applied to non-Irish goods was calculated to deceive, as it would convey the idea that the goods were manufactured in Ireland. The Comptroller-General, as Registrar, allowed the applications & the opponents appealed to the ct.:—Held: the fact that the word "Colleen" was upon a stove offered for sale in Ireland was not calculated to induce the belief that the stove was of Irish origin; the Registrar had arrived at a right conclusion when he decided that the application for registration should be allowed to proceed; & the appeal must be dismissed.—Re JONES & CAMPBELL, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1924), 41 R. 153. Whether mark registrable—Mark not in fact deceptive—Possibility of dishonest use immaterial.—K. applied to register in class 3 for a proprietary medicine for human use, being a mineral salt preparation manufactured in Carlsbad, Bohemia, a mark consisting of the following particulars: the words "Kutnow's Improved Effervescent Carlsbad Powder," then below, a picture of the well known rock at Carlsbad with a chamois on the top, & below "Hirschensprung or Deer-leap, Carlsbad," with the name "S. Kutnow & Co." This application was opposed by the corpn. of Carlsbad, who are proprietors of the springs there, & their lessees, on the ground that the mark was calculated to deceive. According to the evidence, the term "Carlsbad Salts" in the trade was applied not only to natural salts from the opponents' springs, but also with distinguishing terms to salt sold by other persons, & not made from the products of the opponents' springs. Kutnow's goods were not got up in the same way as the opponents'. The actual rock at Carlsbad, though belonging to the corpn., was some considerable distance from the springs from which the salts came. It was alleged by the opponents that even if the powder originally manufactured by K. was made of genuine Carlsbad salt, he could no longer procure any, & would thus be deceiving the public:—Held: the mark was not intended or likely to deceive the public & the mere fact that a mark might be dishonestly used was no ground for refusing registration.—Re KUTNOW'S TRADE MARK (1893), 10 R. The question was whether the use of the word "Strathmore" by deft. was calculated to deceive:—Held: (1) the word "blend" described simply the operation of manufacturing, & was not an essential part of the name of pltf.'s whisky; the word "Strathmore" was a fancy name; the use of that word by any person, other than pltf., as a name for whisky would be calculated to deceive; & deft. must be restrained by injunction from using the word either as part of his trade mark, or otherwise; (2) it was not lawful for deft. to register the word "Strathmore" in combination with his trade mark, & the Register must be rectified by striking out the word.—*BLAIR v. A chemist named Swift opposed the application on the ground that he had for many years used those words, & that therefore the mark was calculated to deceive. The opponent secondly contended that the registration should be accompanied by a disclaimer of the exclusive use of those words. In an affidavit filed after the opposition appcts. stated their willingness to make such disclaimer, but the opponent insisted that they ought to distinguish their specific as an American one:—Held: (1) the mere use of the words "Swift's Specific," without something to indicate that the goods sold by appct. were sold as those of the opponent, was not a ground for opposition; (2) without deciding whether the disclaimer should be contained in the application, there ought to be a disclaimer, but since the date of the offer the opponent was in the wrong.—Re SWIFT SPECIFIC CO.'S TRADE MARK (1889), 6 R. E. put in evidence to show the word "Filtered" did not refer to either the character or the quality of the goods, as the blue did not go through any process of filtration:—Held: (1) the word either referred to the character or quality of the goods, or, if not was calculated to deceive, in either case the first mark was bad & must be expunged; (2) there must be a disclaimer as to the second mark of any exclusive right to the word "filtered."—Re EDGE'S TRADE MARKS (1891), 8 R. B. & Sons used in respect of butter & cheese, but never in respect of condensed milk; & appet. M., who was an importer of condensed milk, applied for the registration of a somewhat similar mark in respect of condensed skimmed milk. Both marks contained the representation of a cowslip. M. had sold condensed milk for upwards of twenty-five years under the same "Cowslip Brand Condensed Milk" or "Cowslip Condensed Milk" & that was the name by which his goods had been distinguished. Messrs. B. & Sons did not oppose M.'s application. It is provided by above Act, s. 19, that except by the order of the ct., which was the order made under sect. 21, or except in the case of certain old marks, "no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with one belonging to a different proprietor which is already on the register with respect to such goods or description of goods as nearly resembling such a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive."

Sect. 21 provides that "in cases of honest concurrent user or of other special circumstances which, in the opinion of the ct., make it proper to do so the ct. may permit the registration of the same trade mark, or of nearly identical trade marks, for the same goods or description of goods by more than one proprietor," subject, if thought right, to any conditions or limitations:—Held: (1) the words "calculated to deceive" in sect. 19 have a milder meaning than the same words have in sect. 11 of the Act; (2) the words "so nearly resembling such a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive" mean "so nearly identical as to be confusing"; (3) sect. 19 recognises that the ct. may order registration of a mark where it is either identical with a mark already registered or so nearly identical as to be confusing; (4) the words "same trade mark" in sect. 21 correspond with the word "identical" in sect. 19 & the words "nearly identical trade marks" in sect. 21 correspond with the words "so nearly resembling such a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive" in sect. 19; (5) the registrar had rightly refused the application; (6) this was a case in which the ct. in its discretion, under sects. 19 & 21, could & ought to order the registration of M.'s mark to be proceeded with.—Re MAEDER'S APPLICATION, [1916] 1 Ch. 304; 85 L. The opponents, who were flour millers, had in 1895 registered the word in Class 42 for food, including flour & bread, & they opposed the present application, mainly on the ground that the trade mark had for ten years past denoted their flour & bread, which had been for many years, both by themselves & by bakers in different parts of the country, sold out of vans, carts, & motor cars bearing the word displayed in large characters:—Held: the use of the word "Millennium" on carriages & vehicles manufactured by appets., marked in the manner usual to such a trade, was not calculated to lead the public to think that bread & flour which might be sold out of them were of the opponents manufacture; the goods in respect of which the opponents were registered were not "the same description of goods" as those of appets.; & the word was therefore properly placed on the Register by the Comptroller.—Re LAKE & ELLIOTT'S APPLICATION (1903), 20 R. 174. — — — — —.]—In 1905 J. M., Ltd., a co. which carried on business in the manufacture of motor cars & accessories as well as of push-bicycles, & had used the name "Sunbeam" as a trade mark for such goods, assigned to the Sunbeam Motor Car Co., Ltd., the goodwill of their business relating to motor cars & their accessories. Previously to such sale they had registered the word "Sunbeam" in Class 22 in respect of motor vehicles, & the assignment included all trade marks connected with the business assigned. Subsequently to the assignment the trade mark was limited to motor cars, & the Sunbeam Co. were registered as proprietors of the trade mark. The assignment contained covenants by the Sunbeam co. as to the use by them of the word "Sunbeam", which were subsequently varied. J. M., the governing director of J. M., Ltd., was chairman of the Board of the Sunbeam co., but the directors of J. M., Ltd., did not hold a controlling interest in the Sunbeam co. In 1914 the Sunbeam co. took up the manufacture of aeroplanes. J. M., Ltd. had never made aeroplanes or aeroplane parts, but they had since the assignment manufactured motor bicycles. In 1913 J. M., Ltd. registered, under No. 349,035, the word "Sunbeam" in Class 6 for goods which covered aeroplanes, but this was done inadvertently & the registration was cancelled in 1915, except in respect of engines & parts thereof included in Class 6 for motor bicycles & other purposes, but not including engines or parts thereof for aeroplanes or for other automobiles besides motor bicycles, & radiators for internal-combustion engines. The Sunbeam co. applied for the registration of the words "Sunbeam-Coatalen" as a trade mark for engines & parts thereof included in Class 6 for aeroplanes & motor vehicles other than motor bicycles. The mark had been largely used by them for some time. The Registrar refused the application on the ground of the resemblance of the proposed trade mark to the trade mark No. 349,035 & in exercise of his discretion, & also on the ground that the mark described goods which were the subject of a patent. Appets. appealed to the ct., & on the hearing of the appeal the last-mentioned ground of objection was not pressed, & the main objection was based on the splitting of the trade mark "Sunbeam" between two cos. carrying on, it was contended, substantially the same business:—Held: the goods, in respect of which registration was now applied for, were not either in fact or commercially of the same description as those for which the trade Mark No. 349,035 was registered; the businesses were essentially distinct; sect. 19 did not apply; & the registration of the trade mark applied for would tend, not to aggravate, but to neutralise the mischief, if any, due to the splitting of the "Sunbeam" mark.—Re SUNBEAM MOTOR-CAR CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1916), 32 T. 191. Likelihood of mistake—When fair use of both marks.]—W. & co. proposed to register as a trade mark for ale a triangle with a double outline, inscribing within the double outline the words "Beccles Brewery. Established 1830," the inner triangle having within it a conspicuous figure of a church. B. & co., whose trade mark for pale ale was a plain triangle, which in use was coloured red, applied to prevent the registration of the proposed trade mark as being so similar to theirs as to be calculated to deceive:—Held: as W. & co. would be at liberty to print their trade mark in whatever colour they pleased, & if printed on a red ground it would be so similar to that of B. & co. that a purchaser might be misled, the registration ought not to be allowed.—Re WORTHINGTON & Co.'S TRADE MARK (1880), 14 Ch. In 1884, being about to extend his business to class 12, he applied to register for that class the same head with the word "Athena" under it. This application was opposed by B., who had used from 1869 a cutler's mark consisting of a head with the word "way" under it. The head had a sort of wig upon it, with small curls behind, & included the neck & part of the shoulders. In 1884 B. registered this mark under the Act of 1883 as an old cutler's mark, but the design actually registered departed from the old mark which he used, the head on the register being an uncovered head with a few sparse hairs upon it, & taking in only a small portion of the neck & no part of the shoulders:—Held: the question whether a new mark is so like another as to be calculated to deceive is to be decided by considering whether the new mark is so like the other that when both are fairly used one is likely to be mistaken for the other, regard being had to size, the material on which the mark is to be impressed, the effects of wear & tear, & other surrounding circumstances; L.'s mark was to be compared with the mark B. had put on the register, not with the mark which he had used; & B., whose evidence was directed to a comparison between L.'s mark & the mark which B. had used, which was much more like L.'s mark than B.'s registered mark was, had not made out that the new mark was calculated to deceive.—Re LYNDON'S TRADE-MARK (1886), 32 Ch. 1. ——"The object of sect. 11 of the Act respecting Trade Marks &

Industrial Designs, R. S. C., c. 63, as enacted in 54 & 55 Vict. c. 35 (D.), is to prevent the registration of a trade mark bearing such a resemblance to one already registered as to mislead the public, & to render it possible that goods bearing the trade mark pro-

they had since 1903 sold their sardines under a label containing not only the words "Skipper Sardines" or "Skipper Brand," but the head of a sailor with a pipe in his mouth taken from a photograph of which they owned the copyright. The mark they now sought to register consisted of this picture with the word "sailor" underneath it. G. H. & Co. opposed the application. They had been since the year 1907 the registered owners of the word "Skipper" for all goods in class 42 other than sardines, & they had since 1894 sold tinned salmon under a registered label consisting of the picture of a seaman throwing a life-belt overboard with the words "Skipper Salmon" upon it. They were also the registered owners of the word "Captain," & had sold tinned salmon under a registered label consisting of a picture of a seaman in oilskins & a pipe in his mouth with the words "Captain Brand" upon it. The opposition was based mainly on the ground that the picture proposed by appets. to be registered had become so associated in the public mind with the word "Skipper" in connection with the sardines sold by appets., they were in fact known as "Skipper Sardines," that the public would inevitably call goods sold with this picture upon them "Skipper goods," even though the word "Sailor" were printed upon or beneath it, & that thereby deception & confusion would be caused between the goods of appets. & of the opponents. The registrar refused the application:—Held: having regard to the fact that the mark was one calculated to distinguish appets.' goods from those of everybody else, & as a matter of fact the mark had become distinctive of appets.' sardines & would be distinctive of appets.' goods if applied to other articles, no such confusion or deception was likely to ensue which would justify the ct. in refusing registration.—Re WATSON (ANGUS) & Co.'s APPLICATION (1911), 28 R. P. C. 313.

196. — When marks seen separately.—Where an application to register a trade mark is opposed on the ground that it might lead to confusion with a trade mark already registered, the question is not whether there is a similarity between the two marks when placed side by side, but whether, when a person sees one mark apart from the other, he might take it for that other.—Re SANDOW LTD.'s APPLICATION (1914), 30 L. The owners of a trade mark already on the Register, which consisted of another representation of primitive Eastern Dye Works, opposed the registration of appets.' mark on the ground that confusion would arise in the trade & with the public. The Registrar decided in favour of the opponents:—Held: there was a probability of both marks becoming known in eastern trade by the same name, & the mark applied for was likely to lead to confusion, & the decision of the Registrar was right.—Re CHEMISCHE FABRIK GREISHEIM ELEKTRON'S APPLICATION (1910), 27 R. pictorial label, of which the prominent feature was the representation of a cat in a sitting posture got up as a puss in boots, was opposed by the registered proprietors of an old trade mark for gin, consisting of the device of a cat standing on a barrel, on the ground that under this trade mark in the Eastern markets, where the opponents had acquired a great reputation, their goods had become known as "Cat" goods, & that the registration must cause confusion. The device of a cat per se had become publici juris in this country in connection with gin, & appets. disclaimed any right to the exclusive use thereof:—Held: appets.' mark was not calculated to deceive, there being no resemblance between the two marks, & the mere possibility of confusion arising from the insufficient description of the opponents' mark by ignorant people in foreign markets were not a ground for refusing registration.—*BOORD & SON, INCORPORATED v. 200. Nature of goods.—When comparing a trade mark tendered for registration with another mark already on the register or assigned by the Cutlers' Company, Sheffield, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the new mark so nearly resembles the old one as to be calculated to deceive, the ct. will have regard to the nature of the goods, to the nature & size of the mark, to the mode of affixing it to the goods, to the probable result in practice, & to all the circumstances of the case; & if, having regard to such circumstances, the new mark would be likely to be mistaken for the old one, registration will be refused.

Re applied for the registration of a new mark for cutlery & metal goods included in classes 12 & 13, such trade mark representing a part of his armorial bearings, & consisting of a curved horn, with a twist in the middle, & surmounted by two roses. The application was opposed by the Cutlers' Company of Sheffield on the ground that the mark so nearly resembled a Sheffield mark for similar articles assigned forty-five years previously to H., as to be calculated to deceive. H.'s mark consisted of a curved horn, suspended by a looped cord. The marks were sufficiently distinct when printed in a large size, but the Ct. of Appeal being of opinion that, in practice, when the two marks were stamped in a small size on small metal article & having regard also to the probability of blurring taking place in the process of stamping, the one mark would be likely to be mistaken for the other:—Held: registration must be refused.—Re ROSING'S APPLICATION (1878), 54 L. 212. On summons to direct the Comptroller to proceed with registration of the trade mark:—Held: (1) though it were a case in which the similarity might not be such as to induce the ct. on that fact alone to grant an injunction, it was the duty of the Comptroller to consider, having regard to the course of trade whether the trade mark so nearly resembled the other as to be calculated to deceive & he would be right in saying "that this mark so nearly resembles the other that I will not encourage litigation by allowing a registration which would lead to litigation"; (2) this trade mark was likely to mislead persons wishing to buy linen stamped with one of the earlier trade marks.—Re SPIER (1887), 55 L. 214. Totality of marks.]—E. P., Ltd., applied to register the word "Egall," which they had used as a trade mark for five years, in Part B. of the register in class 42 in respect of dried eggs. The application was opposed by H. & co. on the grounds (inter alia), that they were the proprietors of a trade mark "Egrol" registered in class 42 in respect of custard powders, blanc mange powders, baking powders & egg powders, & that the word "Egall" was not distinctive & was not a registrable trade mark. Appets. alleged that dried eggs were not the same description of goods as the opponents' goods. The Registrar refused the application, & appets. appealed to the ct.:—Held: (1) in application for registration in Part B. of the register the Registrar had no such general discretion to refuse a mark which satisfied the requirements of Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), s. 2, as he had in regard to applications to register in Part A. but that the Registrar's discretion was not excluded in considering whether an application was inconsistent with Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 19; in such application the onus of showing that the mark applied for, if registrable, was otherwise objectionable lay on an opponent; (2) user was a material consideration in determining whether a mark was capable of distinguishing the goods of an appct. within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), s. 2; the word "Egall" was not incapable of distinguishing appets.' goods; appets.' & the opponents' goods were goods of the same description; the same considerations as to probability of confusion that applied in application for registration in Part A. applied in applications for registration in Part B.; (3) in cases of alleged confusion the interests of the public were a more important consideration than the relative rights of the parties; & (4) the first syllable "Eg" could not be disregarded because it had some relation to the nature of the goods, but in all such cases the totality of the two marks must be considered; "Egall" was so similar to "Egrol" as to make confusion likely & the appeal must be dismissed.—Re EGG PRODUCTS, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1922), 39 R. 215. Interests of public.]—In 1915 the Havana Commercial co., a corp. carrying on business as cigar manufacturers in New York & Havana, applied to register in class 45 a trade mark of which the word "Cubanola" was an important feature. The application was opposed by George Wilks, Ltd., cigar merchants, who had for the past fourteen years used the word "Cubanola" in connection with cigars of British manufacture sold by them under the fictitious firm name of "de Lorenzo y Ca"; the principal ground of opposition was that the registration would cause confusion in the trade & to the public. The Registrar of Trade Marks decided that, although the opponents' use of the word "Cuba nola" had been improper, he was bound to take notice of it, & he refused the application. From this decision appets. appealed to the ct. It was admitted by a director of the opponent co. that their sales of "Cubanola" cigars had never been more than 200 boxes per annum:—Held: though, in the circumstances, the opponents, as claimants to a mark, had no merits whatever, the matter did not depend solely upon their ownership of the mark & the application had to be considered from the point of view of the public, & there being a possibility of confusion in the mind of the public, if the application were acceded to, the Registrar's discretion ought not to be interfered with.—*Re HAVANA (COMMERCIAL CO.'S APPLICATION (1916), 33 R. The Comptroller refused to register this mark on the ground of its resemblance to a mark registered by G. in the same class, without G.'s consent, which was refused. M. appealed to the Board of Trade, who referred the matter to the Ct., & directed them to serve G. with a notice of motion, which was done, & G. appeared to resist an Order for registration:—Held: it was important to see what was the essential part of the proposed mark, especially having regard to Patent, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), which permitted of alterations to be made in non-essential parts; the lion rampant was an essential part of M.'s mark, & so closely resembled the lion rampant of G. as to be calculated to deceive; neither the oval, which was common to the trade, nor the inscription, "J. The application was refused, & appets. appealed, & the appeal was referred to the Ct.:—Held: whether beer & rum are or are not the same description of goods, still, even if they are not, there was such a probability of deception that the Ct. ought not to say that the mark must be registered, & the appeal was dismissed with costs.—*Re TURNEY & SON'S TRADE MARK No. 161, 776 (1893), 10 T. The co. had made a speciality of cameras suitable for bicyclists, & the appliances for fixing the same to bicycles, & had largely advertised "Bicycle Kodaks." They held all the shares in a limited co. called the Kodak Co., Ltd., which, however, had not commenced business. In Aug. 1897, the J. G. (a) from carrying on business under the name Kodak Cycle Co., Ltd.; (b) from passing off their goods as the goods of plffs.; (c) from infringing the trade marks of the E. Co. They moved for an interlocutory injunction, & also moved to expunge the registration of "Kodak" by the J. G. Co.:—Held: the word "Kodak" had become identified with the E. Co. & with their goods; the evidence showed a close connection between the bicycle & photographic trades; registration had been obtained by an untrue statement to the Registrar; defts. were trying to get the benefit of the reputation of the E. 229. Half apple with word "Pomril" — Apple with words "Apple Brand."]—Resp. had for many years been the registered proprietors of a trade mark for cider, consisting of a circular label having in the centre the representation of an apple, with the words "Apple Brand" at the top. They had also registered the words "Apple Brand" alone. Their cider was known in the trade as "Apple Brand." Applts. were the registered proprietors of a trade mark for cider consisting of the word "Pomril" alone. They applied to register in respect of cider a trade mark consisting of the representation of half an apple showing the pips, & having certain words & letters printed across it, including the word "Pomril." The Comptroller refused to register it without resps. consent, on the ground that it had such resemblance to the resps.' registered mark as to be calculated to deceive, within Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 72 (2):—Held: the Comptroller had exercised

230. "Jock Scott" — "Scotch Jock."]—A co. sought to register two marks as trade marks in class 43, both having the device of a salmon fly, one of them having the words "Salmon Fly Brand" & the other having also the words "Jock Scott Salmon Fly." The Comptroller refused to register the marks on the ground of similarity to a mark consisting of the words "Scotch Jock" & also on the ground that other marks of a similar nature had already been refused. Appets. appealed, & the appeal was referred to the ct. At the hearing the owners of the "Scotch Jock" mark opposed, & there was evidence of use since 1896 of one of the marks of which registration had previously been refused. Appets. had made no inquiries as to these marks, although invited to do so by the Comptroller:—Held: the use of the words "Jock Scott" would be calculated to deceive, & as to the other mark that the Comptroller had exercised his discretion properly, & it ought not to be overruled.—Re BOOTLE'S DISTILLERY CO., LTD.'s APPLICATIONS (1903), 21 R. 231. "Tablones" — "Tabloids."]—In 1905 the Capsuloid Co. applied for the registration of the words "Tablones, they remove the Cause" as a trade mark in class 3, in respect of a medicated preparation for human use, the right to the exclusive use of the words, other than Tablones being disclaimed. Since 1903, appets. had sold a proprietary medicine, namely a cure of indigestion, under the name Tablones. The Comptroller refused to register the mark on account of its likeness to the registered trade mark of B. W. & Co. consisting of or containing the word "Tabloid or Tabloids," registered in respect of all goods in class 3. Appets. appealed & the appeal was referred to the ct., B. W. & Co. being served with notice. Applts. relied on the distinction between the goods, alleging that when buying tabloids the name of the drug required was necessarily added, & appellants appealed direct to the public, whereas respondents appealed to the medical profession & their goods were ordered through chemists. Resps. called chemists to give evidence that the public often asked for tabloids for indigestion, or headache or other complaints:—Held: it was proved that the word "tablones" was calculated to deceive within the meaning of sect. 72, sub-sect. 2, Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888.—Re CAPSULOID CO., LTD.'s APPLICATION (1906), 23 R. 232. "Motricine" — "Motorine."]—In 1901 the opponents registered the word "motorine" as a trade mark for lubricating oil, with a disclaimer of the right to the exclusive use of the word "motor." Since registration they had sold large quantities of a lubricating oil suitable for, but not confined to, motors under that name. In 1906 appets. applied to register the word "motricine" as a trade mark for a spirit for motive power purposes derived from petroleum. The opponents opposed the application, & the registrar refused to register the mark. On an application by appets. that the registrar might be directed to proceed with the registration of their mark, & that the opponents' mark might be expunged from the register:—Held: (1) under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 11, the onus of showing that the proposed trade mark was not calculated to deceive rested on appets.; they had failed to discharge that onus; that being so the ct. would decline to exercise its discretion under Trade Marks

Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 21, of allowing conditional registration; & the application to register must therefore be refused; (2) the word "motorine" had "no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods," & was therefore a good trade mark under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (4), & the application to expunge it from the register must consequently be refused.—Re COMPAGNIE INDUSTRIELLE DES PÉTROLES' APPLICATION, Re PRICE'S PATENT CANDLE CO.'S TRADE MARK, [1907] 2 Ch. 435; 76 L. The Registrar refused the application:—Held: the words "Aqua-Repela" as part of a trade mark would be likely to lead to confusion, having regard to the fact that the word "Repellus" was already on the register as an essential particular of two trade marks in respect of the same class of goods.—Re WILKS' (TRADING AS WILKS BROTHERS) APPLICATION (1911), 29 R. Co. on the ground that it would lead to confusion with their trade mark "State Express" which was registered in respect of the same class of goods. The Comptroller-General held there was no reasonable probability of confusion or deception & allowed the mark to proceed to registration. Opponents appealed, & by leave, adduced further evidence showing that in practice the expression "State Express" was abbreviated to "State" & also sometimes "States." Appets. also filed evidence denying the alleged practice:—Held: appets. had not discharged the onus on them of showing that the proposed mark was free from all danger of leading to confusion or deception & on that ground leave to proceed with the registration ought to have been refused.—Re UNITED KINGDOM TOBACCO CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1912), 29 R. registered in class 42 in respect of confectionery, & used for toffee, as to be calculated to deceive, & that the words did not satisfy the requirements of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9. The Registrar allowed the applications, & the opponent appealed to the ct. The second of the said objections was not pressed before the Registrar & was not argued before the ct.—Held: the marks applied for so nearly resembled the opponent's trade mark as to be calculated to lead to confusion, & the appeal must be allowed.—Re WHEATLEY AKEROYD & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATIONS (1920), 37 R. "Zykol" — "Zee-Kol."—An application was made in May, 1919, for registration of the word "Zykol" in ordinary type as a trade mark in class 2 in respect of chemical substances used for agricultural, horticultural, veterinary & sanitary purposes. The application was opposed by the proprietor of a trade mark "Zee-kol" registered in class 3 in respect of medicines for human use. The opponent in Aug. 1919, applied for registration of "Zee-kol" in class 2. The opponent alleged that large quantities of their pills & their ointment & soap each having antiseptic properties, had been sold to the public, that their goods were used for animals as well as human beings suffering from wounds for antiseptic purposes, & that there was possibility of deception & confusion. Appets. offered to limit their application to fluid disinfectants for sterilising purposes. The Registrar of Trade Marks, whilst holding that "Zykol" & "Zee-kol" were too near, if used for the same description of goods, held that there would be no probability of the goods coming into competition & that the goods were not goods of the same description, & that the application might proceed for fluid disinfectants for sterilising purposes in class 2 for use by surgeons & nurses. The opponent appealed to the ct. & further evidence was adduced:—Held: it was established that appct.'s preparation was intended for, & largely used by, the public in general; their disinfectant was of the same description of goods as the pills, ointment & soap with which the opponent's trade mark had been used, both being medicines for human use to alleviate similar diseases, & there was such similarity between the names "Zee-kol" & "Zykol" that risk of mistake was inevitable, & the application ought not to proceed.—Re BROWN (J.) & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1920), 38 R. The proprietors of the registered trade mark "Germolene," which was registered & used for skin ointment, opposed the registration on the ground that confusion & deception might thereby be caused. In support of the opposition a declaration was made on behalf of the owners of the registered trade mark "Homoecea," another skin ointment, who were too late to oppose formally. The Registrar, while not prepared to hold that appct.'s mark so nearly resembled "Germolene" as to cause confusion or be calculated to deceive, refused to proceed, on the ground that the presence of "Homoecea" on the

242. "Galaxy" — "Glaxo."—An application was made to register a mark consisting of the word "Galaxy" with the words "The Milky Way" appearing in an enclosure formed by lines springing out of the tail of the "y" in "Galaxy," the whole being enclosed in a circle, in class 42 in respect of substances used for food or as ingredients for food but not including toffee or goods of the like kind. The application was opposed on the ground that the mark applied for consisted essentially of the word "Galaxy," & that it so nearly resembled the opponents' mark "Glaxo," registered in class 42, as to be calculated to deceive. The opponents used this mark "Glaxo" in connection with a milk food for children, which had been extensively sold & advertised & which had a very wide reputation. There had been no user of the mark applied for. The Registrar allowed appet.'s mark to proceed, but limited the specification of goods by the addition of the words: "& not including dried, desiccated, & malted milk, condensed milk, & any milk food or milk production for children, invalids or other people":—Held: the predominant & essential feature of the mark applied for was the word "Galaxy"; the principles laid down in the Pianolist Co.'s Application, No. 257, post, applied where one of the marks, though not strictly a word mark, contained a word as its predominant feature; the evidence showed likelihood of, & actual cases of, confusion; appet.'s mark, considered as a whole, so nearly resembled the opponent's mark as to be likely to lead to confusion if used in connection with the same description of goods; & the words of limitation imposed by the Registrar were not too wide.—Re SMITH'S APPLICATION (1922), 40 R. 243. Picture of ship—One of four panels depicting ship.—William Henry Huxley, trading as Huxley & Co., applied to register as a trade mark for illuminating, etc., oils & greases a new label consisting of four pictorial panels intended to represent the history of oil from the well to the consumer. One panel depicted a ship. The application was opposed by Prices' Patent Candle Co., Ltd. & Prices' Co., Ltd., who were the registered owners of numerous trade marks consisting of a picture of a ship & also of a trade mark consisting of the words "Ship Brand," & whose goods were alleged to be known under the title "Ship Brand," on the ground (inter alia) that the mark applied for had such a resemblance to the opponents' trade mark as to be calculated to deceive. The application was refused. Appet. appealed to the ct.:—Held: on the evidence, the opponents' goods had become known as "Ship Brand" goods; the picture of a ship in appet.'s proposed trade mark, if it stood alone, would undoubtedly lead to confusion in relation to one of the registered trade marks of the opponents representing a battleship; the fact that this particular mark of the opponents might not have been much used made no difference, inasmuch as it was on the Register & the opponents were entitled to use it; the four pictures in the proposed trade mark were not combined in such a way as to take from the picture of the ship its own individual significance &, that being so, there was a probability of confusion; & the appeal to the ear made by the proposed trade mark as well as the appeal to the eye was fatal to the application.—Re HUXLEY'S (TRADING AS HUXLEY & CO.) APPLICATION (1924), 41 R. P. C. 423.

There was no evidence of user in this country by appet's. The application was opposed by J. S. F. Ltd. on the ground that the mark applied for bore such resemblance both in appearance & pronunciation to their mark "Fry," which had been registered in 1886 & which was widely known in connection with chocolate, as to lead to confusion. The application was refused & the applicants appealed to the ct.:—Held: the two marks would not convey the same impression to the eye, but that, in view of the probability of "Freia" being pronounced as if it were spelt "F-r-y-e-r" & of the two words being used in the possessive case, the words would sound the same to the ordinary purchasers, & the appeal should be dismissed with costs.—*Re AKT. The application was opposed by the owners of a trade mark, consisting of the word "Nujol," registered in class 3, in respect of medicinal & curative preparations for human use. Appet. carried on business under the name of "The Health Centre" & sold food stuffs & natural remedies, including the fruit preparation to which he proposed to apply the trade mark. The opponents had used their trade mark in connection with refined paraffin oil for use as a remedy for constipation. They had sold their preparation in large quantities, & they alleged that "Nuvola," used in respect of appet.'s preparation, was calculated to deceive. They alleged also that the name "Nuvola" had been adopted fraudulently. Appet. alleged that the preparations sold under the names "Nujol" & "Nuvola" respectively were of very different appearance; that "Nujol" was a medicine, "Nuvola" a food; that the preparations would not be sold by the same dealers; & that the names were such that confusion would be impossible. The Registrar held that appet. had failed to prove that confusion would not arise, & he refused registration:—Held: the allegation of fraud was without foundation; that "Nuvola" was more of a medicine than a food & might come into competition with "Nujol"; the opponents might use their mark in connection with a remedy for constipation in a solid form, or with a medicated food; the two names might be mistaken for one another; they seemed to belong to a series of associated marks to which sects. 24 to 26 of Trade Marks Acts, 1905-1919 might be applicable; that the applicant had left the matter in dubio; & registration must be

The application was opposed by W. as the registered proprietor of two marks for the same class of goods. The first mark was registered as an old mark in 1877, & consisted of an eight-pointed star. This mark was chiefly used upon packet tobacco; but from 1870 to 1884 cigars were manufactured for W. by an English firm, upon which the mark was used as part of a label containing the name of an imaginary Spanish firm & the word “Habana.” W.'s trade in cigars was comparatively small, & was subsidiary to his trade in packet tobacco. The second mark was registered in 1886 as a new mark, & consisted of a pictorial label, & by the side of the label an eight-pointed star, to which the words “trade mark” were attached. W.'s goods were frequently ordered by the public as “star” goods. D. moved to expunge W.'s marks:—Held: (1) W. had no exclusive right to the name or design of a star, apart from such claim, D.'s mark was not calculated to deceive, & D. was entitled to registration; (2) W.'s first mark was distinctive, & was not invalidated by the mode of user; because the misrepresentation accompanying the use of the mark upon cigars was not such as to destroy its distinctive character; & because there had been no general or very extensive user of the mark upon cigars; (3) W.'s second mark was misleading, by reason of the position of the words “trade mark,” & ought to be expunged except as to the star, subject to an application being made by W. to amend.—Re DEXTER'S APPLICATION, Re WILLS'S TRADE MARKS, [1893] 2 Ch. 262; 62 L. The mark was originally registered by M. who supplied L. with cigars made up in boxes labelled with the mark, but the mark was designed by L., registered by M. at L.'s request, & subsequently assigned by M. to L. The label, the use of which by the defendant was complained of was “The G. & M. 2d. Cigars.” Deft. submitted pltf's. trade mark was not valid; he denied using the labels complained of, & he denied that the use of the words & letters complained of were colourable or calculated to deceive, & he alleged that the only reason for using “2d.” was to signify price. Deft. adopted his device in 1889; he had previously been in the habit of selling his cigars as “London 2d. Wonders.” Pltf's. evidence was to the effect that this mark was a distinctive device well known to the trade as the “Two D Brand,” & as such had acquired a considerable reputation; deft.'s saleswoman had, when asked if she sold the “Great Two Ds,” said “Yes,” & supplied a box of cigars with the label of deft. which was complained of; that deft. himself had sold his cigars as “The Two Ds,” & had said they would sell as “The Two Ds,” & had offered them to another person with the avowed object of his reselling them as “Two Ds.” The evidence as to the saleswoman was denied by her, & deft. denied giving any authority to sell his goods as pltf's., & that he ever used the words “Two Dec” cigars: he said “2d.” meant twopenny. It was also shown that a very large number of cigars at the price of 2d., & having labels indicating that price, had been sold: in particular, “London 2d. Wonders” had been sold for years prior to the registration of pltf's. trade mark:—Held: assuming that pltf's. were entitled on the pleadings to make out a case of passing off, which was doubted, & assuming that the “Great Two D” had become exclusively associated with pltf's. cigars, pltf's. were attempting to claim an exclusive right to the expression “Two D,” & their case on this completely failed, the evidence in the cases, other than that of the

Patents were taken out in 1885 & 1886 for improvements in wheaten meal by the same persons. In 1891, this trade mark & these patents became vested in plffs. In 1896, plffs. brought an action (a) for infringement of the trade mark, & (b) alleged passing off by deffts. of their goods as plffs.' by the use of the word "Triticine." Deffts. alleged that they had used the words "Triticine" before the invention of the word "Triticumina." They moved to expunge the trade mark from the Register on the grounds (a) that it was the name of a patented article; (b) that it was descriptive. Plffs. had for some years sold "Triticumina" flour, "Triticumina" meal, "Triticumina" food, & other products in the name of which the word "Triticumina" occurred. It appeared that in certain advertisements plffs. had used the word "patent" in connection with these articles. The trial of the action & the hearing of the motion came on together:—Held: (1) the word "Triticine" had been used by deffts.' predecessors for wheat-meal products before the registration or use by plffs. of the word "Triticumina"; (2) plffs. had not shown that the use of "Triticine" by deffts. would deceive, & the action must be dismissed, but, under the special circumstances of the case, without costs; (3) the word "Triticumina" was not a fancy word, being derived from "Triticum" wheat by the addition of the suffix "ina," & being intended to be descriptive; also the word was either the name of a patented article, in which case it was not a good trade mark, or else that plffs. & their predecessors had represented their articles sold under the word "Triticumina" as patented, & semble, without deciding the point, in such case the word could not be a good trade mark.—*MEARY & CO., LTD. v. 256. "Night Cap"—Red "Cap."—In 1898 a firm of soap manufacturers registered the words "Mother Red Cap" in classes 47 & 48, & subsequently the words "Red Cap" in class 47 for goods which included soap. In 1899 another firm of soap manufacturers, who alleged that they did not know of such registrations, registered the words "Night Cap" in classes 2, 47, 48, & 50, including in each class soap of some kind. In 1899 the owners of the marks "Mother Red Cap" & "Red Cap" applied to register "White Cap," & thereupon became aware of the registration of "Night Cap," & in 1900 moved to expunge "Night Cap" on the ground of the probability of confusion with their marks. The mark "Mother Red Cap" had never been used, & the mark "Red Cap" had not been used until some time in 1900. The mark "Night Cap" had been used prior to the use of "Red Cap," & had been largely used:—Held: under the circumstances the words "Night Cap" were not calculated to deceive, & the motions were dismissed with costs.—Re HEDLEY'S TRADE MARKS (1900), 17 R. 257. "Neola"—"Pianola."—An application was made for the registration as a trade mark of the word "Neola" for a "piano player," being a musical instrument included in class 9. The registered proprietors of a Trade Mark "Pianola" registered for all goods in class 9 opposed the registration. The Comptroller decided against the opponents & ordered the registration to proceed. The opponents appealed. The appeal was referred to the ct.:—Held: having regard to the kind of customers for such goods & a difference in the articles actually sold under the names, there was not likely to be any confusion.—Re PIANOTIST CO.'S APPLICATION (1900), 23 R. 258. Shamrock leaf Inverted shamrock leaf surmounted by Crown.—Appet. trading as S. & Co. sought to register in class 39 for picture post cards, a Trade Mark consisting of a shamrock leaf with the stalk continued so as to form "A & Co." The Registrar required the consent of the proprietors of an old mark, registered for stationery, consisting of an inverted Shamrock leaf bearing the letters "M. W. & Co." & surmounted by a Royal Crown. Appet. having failed to obtain this consent appealed. The proprietors of the registered mark did not appear to contest the application & no evidence was filed:—Held: there would not be any mis-leading results from the two marks being on the Register at the same time.—Re SHAMROCK & CO.'S APPLICATION (1907), 24 R. 259. Device containing letters "A. B. C."—Circular band containing "A. B. C." & A. Baker & Co., Ltd.—In 1906 the Acreated Bread co. applied to register as a trade mark in class 45, in respect of cigars, cigarettes, & tobacco, a device which was a reproduction of the co.'s common seal having the letters A. B. C. in the centre, & which was already registered as their trade mark in class 42 in respect of bread, biscuits, cakes, & flour. Shortly afterwards A. Baker & Co. who carried on business as tobaccoists, applied to register a series of four labels as trade marks in class 45 in respect of cigarettes. One of the distinguishing features in the series was a circular with the words "Cowle & Co., Bull's Head, Bottling," around the circle. The trade mark registration of which was asked for by resp. had been used for many years, & no evidence was adduced tending to show that any person had been deceived thereby:—Held: the trade mark was not calculated to deceive, & the application for registration should be granted.—HEAD BROTHERS, LTD. v. COWIE & CO. (1911), 30 N. Z. L. R. 1167.—N.Z.

band or garter in the centre of which appeared the letters A. B. C., & round the edge of which were contained the words "A. Baker & Co., Ltd." A. Baker & Co. had for the last eleven years used the mark they sought to register & with perfect good faith claimed the right to the exclusive user of the letters "A. B. C." The Aerated Bread Co. opposed A. Baker & Co.'s application on the ground that there had been concurrent user of the letters A. B. C. by themselves, & others, & that A. Baker & Co.'s labels should only be registered on a disclaimer by them of any right to the exclusive use of that part of the label. A. Baker & Co. opposed the Aerated Bread Co.'s application on the ground that their mark contained matter the use of which would, by reason of its being calculated to deceive, be disentitled to protection in a ct. of justice. The registrar refused to register either mark, & thereupon each Co. applied to the ct. for a direction to the registrar to proceed with the registration of their respective marks. At the hearing A. Baker & Co. failed to establish that the letters A. B. C. exclusively indicated their goods.

The evidence also showed that in the past the concurrent user of the letters A. B. C. for the same goods by the Aerated Bread Co., A. Baker & Co., & others had not led to any mistake, confusion, or complaint. On A. Baker & Co.'s application:—Held: (1) in the circumstances the ct., in the exercise of its discretion under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 15, would not impose upon appets. a condition requiring them to disclaim any part of their combination although containing matter common to the trade, & they were entitled to have their trade marks registered.

The condition of a disclaimer is one for the imposition of which some good reason ought to be established rather than one which ought to be imposed unless some good reason to the contrary is made out.

(2) The failure of a claim to a monopoly, put forward & asserted with good faith does not necessarily involve the imposition of a disclaimer as a condition of registration.

(3) Appets.' trade marks were not "advertisements" within the meaning of s. 41 of Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), necessitating the mention therein of apppet. Co.'s name in legible characters; & there was nothing in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), confining the name or signature of apppet.

(4) On the Aerated Bread Co.'s application:—Held: appets. had discharged the burden which lay upon them of showing that their trade mark was not calculated to deceive, & they were entitled to have their mark registered in class 45.—*Re BAKER (ALBERT) & Co.'s APPLICATION, Re AERATED BREAD CO.'s APPLICATION, [1908] 2 Ch. 86; 77 L. 260. Head of Red Indian—Red Indian on horseback.—An application was made for the registration in class 50, in respect of sharpening stones & other goods, of a trade mark consisting of a representation of the head of a Red Indian. The application was refused on the ground of the resemblance of the mark to a trade mark registered in 1904, by H. & Co., in respect of emery & other goods, consisting of the representation of a Red Indian on horseback with the words "Red Indian" beneath; the words were disclaimed as added matter. Appets. appealed to the Board of Trade, who referred the appeal to the ct. H. & Co. were made resps., but did not appear, they however, refused their consent to the registration of the trade mark applied for. Appets. adduced evidence to show that their mark had been used in the United Kingdom for upwards of seven years, without any confusion resulting & was distinctive of their goods:—Held: having regard to the facts as to user of appets.' mark, the application ought to be allowed to proceed, although without prejudice to any opposition which might be entered by H. & Co.—Re CARBORUNDUM CO.'s APPLICATION (1909), 26 R. P. C. 504.

261. "Herogen"—"Ceregen."—The owners of trade marks "Zoogen" & "Ceregen" registered in 1908 & 1909 for medicinal foods for human use, moved to remove from the register the trade mark "Herogen," registered in Apr. 1912 in respect of a food in class 42 on the ground of similarity in sound of the respective words, the likeness of their terminations, & the liability to goods covered by the trade mark "Herogen" being passed off as their goods:—Held: the real question being as to whether the names were so alike phonetically as to be calculated to deceive, not whether a dishonest trader would so use the word as to bring about deception, the articles would be purchased in reliance upon the letters which preceded the common termination, & these being sufficiently distinctive & appets.' & resps.' goods appealing to different classes of customers, the application to expunge failed.—*Re BRITISH DRUG HOUSES, LTD.'s TRADE MARK (1912), 107 L. 262. Cat with "Snowdrop Trade Mark"—Cat & barrel.—Application was made for the registration in respect of gin, of a label containing the representation of a cat in a sitting posture holding a glass in its paws & having on it the words "Cordial Old Tom Gin—'Snowdrop' Trade Mark." "Snowdrop" was a registered trade mark of appets. The application was refused at a hearing on the ground that the mark was calculated to deceive having regard to a cat & barrel mark on the register. Appets. appealed, & said that a cat was common to the trade in gin, & offered to disclaim the right to the exclusive use of a cat; they had made the same offer to the Comptroller:—Held: the application ought to be ordered to proceed.—*Re BAGOTS, HUTTON & Co., LTD.'s APPLICATION (1912), 29 R. 264. Five pointed star in red—Eight pointed star.—The Texas Co. applied to register in class 47 a trade mark in respect of oils for heating, lighting & lubricating, motor spirit & other products of petroleum, in which they had a large trade. Appets.' mark consisted of a five-pointed star in red, with a certain word in black & the letter T in the centre of the star in green. Appets. stated that they desired that their mark, when registered, might be limited to the colours used in the representation on the form of application. There were existing marks on the Register in class 47, one consisting of an eight-pointed star, & the others consisting of two intersecting triangles in a broken-line circle, with lettering:—Held: there was no suggestion that there was any danger of the goods in connection with which the several marks were used being called "Star" goods; appets.' mark did not so closely resemble any of the existing marks as to be calculated to deceive, even if one of the existing marks were to be coloured red, as to which there was no suggestion that it had been, or was going to be, so coloured.—*TEXAS CO.'s APPLICATION (1913), 31 R. 266. "Limit"—"Summit."]—On an application to register the word "Limit" as a trade mark in respect of collars & shirts, the application was opposed by the owners of the trade mark "Summit" registered in respect of collars & shirts on the ground that its similarity would lead to deception:—Held: the words "Limit" & "Summit" were words in common use, each conveying a perfectly definite idea; there was no possibility of anyone being deceived by the two marks; & there was no ground for refusing registration.—Re SMITH (THOMAS A.) 267. "Swankie"—"Swan."]—An application was made for the registration of the word "Swankie" in respect of a detergent. A co., being the proprietors of a trade mark consisting of the devise of a swan in conjunction with the word "Swan," opposed the application on the ground that the use of appct.'s mark in connection with the goods sold by him would be calculated to deceive, & would cause goods marked therewith to be associated with the goods of the co.'s manufacture & so be mistaken & passed off & sold as goods of their manufacture:—Held: there was not the slightest connection between the words "Swan" & "Swankie" & the registration ought not to be refused.—Re CROOK'S TRADE MARK (1914), 110 L. 268. Cat with words "Dubonnet Wine"—Cat on barrel.]—In 1913 a French co. applied for registration of a trade mark in class 43 in respect of "a wine." The trade mark consisted of a label on which appeared a cat in a recumbent position & a bottle of wine in front of the cat & also the words "Dubonnet Wine." The application was opposed by two English cos. The first of these was the registered proprietor of several trade marks registered in class 43, all of which had on them a barrel on its bilge, & on the barrel a cat standing up in a pugnacious attitude; this co. alleged extensive user of this mark for all goods in class 43, & a general reputation for their goods as "cat" goods, although their goods were also known as "cat & barrel" goods. The second opposing co. was registered proprietor of a trade mark used for port wine & containing the words "Gato Brand," "Gato" being the Spanish & Portuguese for "cat," & a representation of a sitting cat & some initials & a signature. Their port sold under this label was sold principally abroad. They also sold "Gato" sherry with a similar representation of a cat & had also a trade in beer, stout & whisky under labels bearing a similar representation of a cat & they alleged a reputation for wine under their cat mark. Appcts. alleged the sale in this country by them & their predecessors in business for fifteen years of a particular preparation of Quinquina under the label applied for, or a label bearing a similar representation of a cat & bottle. Their label was registered in many foreign countries, including France, Portugal & Spain. It appeared that in the year 1898 appcts.' predecessors applied for registration of a label bearing a similar representation of a cat & bottle, but with the words "Quinquina Dubonnet" on it instead of the words "Dubonnet Wine," but the opponents' marks were cited against it, & the application was not proceeded with. Appcts. alleged that the representation of a cat was common in class 43. The opponents denied that a cat was common for wine, they relied on Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 39. The Registrar refused the application, & appcts. appealed. It was held on appeal that the most distinctive part of the appcts.' trade mark consisted in the words "Dubonnet Wine," & that their label was not likely to be confused with either of the opponents' labels; that, having regard to the many foreign registrations, the registration of their label in England could not affect the sale of the appcts.' goods in those foreign countries, & that the question whether natives of foreign countries would be deceived need not be considered; that the fact that the Registrar had found in other proceedings that a cat was common for gin was material; & that sect. 39 did not preclude the ct. from taking the whole of the facts into consideration, including the presence of other cat marks on the Register; that there had been for fifteen years a fairly substantial sale of appcts.' product under the mark applied for or under a mark substantially identical with it, & that it had always been known as "Dubonnet Wine," & there had been no actual confusion or deception; that although the rule in Eno v. Dunn, No. 180, ante, was to be applied, the Registrar had concentrated his attention on the cat & put out of sight the distinguishing features; & that no confusion was likely to result from the registration. The decision of the Registrar was reversed, & the application was ordered to be proceeded with, but to be limited to appcts.' particular preparation of Quinquina sold under the name of Dubonnet in accordance with an offer made by appcts. before the hearing before the Registrar:—Held: the question of foreign user ought to be taken into consideration, but even taking it into consideration appcts.' trade mark was not calculated to deceive.—Re SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME DUBONNET'S APPLICATION (1915), 32 R. 270. Double cross—Plain cross.]—An application was made for registration in class 42 for condensed skimmed milk of a trade mark consisting of a label which as represented & used had a red & in the centre of it a white cross with the words "Lehmann's Cross Milk" & two small black crosses on the white cross & the words "Double cross" at the sides of the white cross. The words the "Cross Brand" & also a number of small crosses appeared on other parts of the label. Appcts. also applied for registration of a somewhat similar label without the two black crosses & the words "Double Cross":—Held: there had been honest concurrent user by appcts. & their brand had come to be known as the "Cross Brand" or the "Double Cross" & no other condensed milk was so known; that there was no likelihood of confusion with the mark registered for pig products & very slight possibility of deception by confusion with the "Diploma Cross" & under the circumstances the ct. ought to exercise its discretion under sect. 21 in favour of appcts.—Re LEHMANN (R.) & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATIONS (1918), 35 R. 271. "Rito"—"Lito."]—F., Ltd., were the registered proprietors of two trade marks, the word "Lito" & the word "y to," coupled with a device, in class 47, in respect of soap, soap powder, & other articles included in the class. In Feb. 1917, L., Ltd., approached F., Ltd., with a view to obtaining their consent to the registration of "Rito" in respect of substantially the same class of goods; this consent was refused; & the registration of "Rito" was refused by the Registrar of trade marks. F. & co. sold a soap paste principally for cleaning hands under the name "y to." L., Ltd., sold a soap which was a grease solvent for cleaning hands under the name of "Rito" & to this F., Ltd., objected on the ground that it was an infringement of their registered trade marks & they commenced an action against L., Ltd., in 1917, for the infringement of trade mark & passing-off. Defts. gave notice of motions to rectify the register, on the ground of non-user, by limiting the registration of "Lito" & by the removal of the "y-to" mark. Pltfs. gave particulars of various instances of the passing-off alleged by them. The motions came on for hearing with the trial of the action when pltfs. relied principally on infringement of their trade mark "Lito," & as regards passing-off on the resemblance of "Rito" to "y-to":—Held: "Rito" was not an infringement of either of pltfs.' trade marks, & there was no probability of deception in what defts. were doing.—*FITCHETTS, LTD. v. 273. "Motrate"—"Filtrate."—An application was made for registration in class 47 of a trade mark consisting of the word "Moderate" in respect of lubricating materials. The application was opposed by the proprietors of a trade mark "Filtrate" registered in class 17 in respect of lubricating oils & greases. The opponents alleged that the word "Filtrate" had been used by them & their predecessor in business for many years, & was well known as distinguishing their goods; that the termination "trate" did not occur in any trade mark, except theirs, in use in the trade; & that the first parts of the words were not sufficiently unlike to prevent probability of deception. Several declarants for the opponents stated that they would have thought that there was some connection between the makers of the two articles if the word "Motrate" had come on the market in addition to the word "Filtrate." The Registrar of trade marks held that, in the absence of evidence as to what classes of persons were the consumers of the goods to which the mark was applied, & as to the way in which the goods were dealt in & packed, & the price, it had not been proved that there was a probability of deception, & that the opposition failed. The opponents appealed to the ct.:—Held: although the two words had the same ending, it was an ending in common use, & the first parts of the words were sufficiently different to distinguish the marks; there was a conflict of evidence as to the probability of deception, & the ct. must decide on the grounds that had been laid down in many cases; the appeal must be dismissed.—Re Fox & Co.'s APPLICATION (1920), 37 R. P. C. 37.

274. Aquatite—Aquaturn.—The owners of two Trade Marks, one consisting of the word "Aquatite," & the other of a label containing that word, both registered in Class 38 in respect of rainproof garments, moved to rectify the Register of Trade Marks by removing therefrom a Trade Mark consisting of the word "Aquaturn" in block letters registered for the same goods.

Appets. had also commenced an action for passing off & infringement of Trade Mark against the registered proprietor of the Trade Mark "Aquaturn," complaining in particular that one of defts.' labels, in which "Aquaturn" was used, was calculated to deceive by reason of its close resemblance to appets.' label containing their registered word "Aquatite"; & before the motion to rectify was heard an order was made in the action granting a perpetual injunction against passing-off & against infringement of their trade marks. Appets. relied on these facts in the motion to rectify. Words commencing in "aqua" were shown to be common for rainproof garments:—Held: although the word "Aquaturn" had been used by resp. as part of a label which had been held to be calculated to deceive, the Trade Mark itself was not calculated to deceive, & the application failed.—Re COHEN'S TRADE MARK (1921), 39 R. P. C. 33.

275. Ace of spades of cumulative design—Ace of spades of flat design.—Pltfs. were the proprietors of a registered trade mark in respect of playing cards consisting of a representation of the ace of spades composed of the superimposition one upon another of eight various aces with artistic embellishments. They had used their representation of an ace of spades for upwards of fifty years & in 1888 had registered it as a trade mark. In 1922 defts. commenced to use a representation of an ace of spades, the central features of which consisted of five various aces superimposed one upon another inclosed in a circle. It appeared at the trial that a peculiar representation of the ace of spades was commonly used in the trade to denote the origin of the goods, & in some cases to denote the different qualities of cards produced by the same manufacturer, but that it was seldom used for the purpose of effecting a sale, & that as a general rule it was not brought to a purchaser's notice until after the completion of a sale. At the trial, it was held that pltfs.' mark was characterised by great artistic merit & wealth of detail, that no one feature could be singled out as predominant, & that it was such as to leave on the mind a strong impression of cumulative design as opposed to flatness; that the predominant features of defts.' mark were aggressively obtrusive & that the design was characterised by flatness; that the superimposition of aces in defts.' mark bore little resemblance to the corresponding feature in pltfs.' mark in shape, colouring or surroundings; that the ordinary purchaser would not confuse the one with the other; & that the action must be dismissed with costs.

The appeal was dismissed on the ground of absence of probability of deception.—GOODALL & SON, LTD. v. WADDINGTON, LTD. (1921), 41 R. P. C. 658, C. A.

276. "Cream o' the North"—"Royal Northern Cream."—H. applied to register a label bearing the brand name "Cream o' the North" as a trade mark in class 43 in respect of Scotch whisky. The application was opposed by M. on the grounds (inter alia) that he was the registered proprietor of a mark registered in 1882 consisting of a label bearing the brand name "Royal Northern Cream" & that S., who did not join in the opposition, was the proprietor of a registered trade mark consisting of a label bearing the brand name "Cream of the North." Apart from the brand names all three labels were dissimilar, & both in the application & in S.'s registration the right to the exclusive use of the words "Cream of the North" was disclaimed. H. & his predecessors in business had for many years used the label applied for, the business being that of blending whisky & selling it to retail customers in his own shops in Glasgow. M.'s headquarters were also in Glasgow, his business being wholesale & export. S. carried on a local trade in London. M. also claimed common rights in the names "Royal Northern Cream" & "Northern Cream":—Held: "Cream" was the common appellation of whisky in the trade; "Royal Northern Cream" had come to indicate the opponent's goods, but it had not been proved that "Northern Cream" bore that meaning; any possibility of confusion between the labels could lie only in the appeal to the ear; considering all the circumstances of the case no probability of such confusion had been shown, & the appeal must be dismissed.—Re HUTCHISON'S APPLICATION (1921), 41 R. P. C. 538.

277. "Tripcaströid" — "Castrol."—An application was made to register a mark consisting of the word "Tripcaströid" in class 47 in respect of lubricating preparations. The application was opposed by the owners of the Trade Mark "Castrol" which had been registered for more than seven years in the same class, in respect of oils for heating, lighting & lubricating, on the ground that the mark was calculated to deceive. Appets. had previously abandoned an application to register the word Castroid, the opponents having objected to this word & threatened to oppose its registration. The opponents now alleged that they used the word "triple" in connection with lubricating oils, & that the word "Tripcaströid" suggested Triple Castroid & that it would be assumed by users to mean a triple form of "Castroid" & ergo of "Castrol." Appets. in reply alleged that the Trade Mark "Castrol" consisted of the words castor oil mis-spelt & that the registration thereof was & always had been invalid, that appets. had abandoned their application to register "Castroid" in order that they might make their mark still more distinctive, that the word "Tripcaströid" was not calculated to deceive & that the opponents were endeavouring to prevent other manufacturers of lubricating oils from using any trade mark which contained any suggestion of castor oil being contained in such lubricant, even when it was in fact contained therein:—Held: upon the evidence & upon a reasonable construction & appreciation of the two words "Castrol" & "Tripcaströid" there was no reasonable ground for thinking that the public would be confused or that there would be deception of goods sold as "Tripcaströid" being mistaken for "Castrol"; the value of the prefix "Trip" as being of importance in the total word sought to be registered could not be neglected; there was no attempt on the part of appets. improperly to obtain any advantage from the reputation attaching to the opponents or to their commodities; there was no probability of the prefix "Trip" being dropped & of the word "Castroid" being used simpliciter.—Re LONDON LUBRICANTS (1920), LTD.'S APPLICATION (1925), 42 R. 279. Applications by members of dissolved partnership—Marks registered in name of old firm.]

—A firm consisting of five partners was dissolved by a deed which provided that the business should in future be carried on by two separate firms comprised of various members of the old firm; that all the partners should be entitled to use the trade marks formerly used by the old firm; & that neither of the new firms should be exclusively entitled to the goodwill of the old business. The new firms applied simultaneously for the registration in their respective names of the marks which had been used by the old firm, some of which were registered in the name of the old firm & one of which was not registered in this country. The new firms mutually consented to each other's application:—Held: the registrations asked for ought not to be allowed.—Re EHRMANN'S APPLICATIONS, [1897] 2 Ch. 495; 66 L. J. Ch. 699; 77 L. The application was opposed by another co. on the ground that they were the registered owners of similar marks in the same class for similar goods. The question arose whether Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 21, as amended by Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), s. 12, gives the Registrar power to deal with cases of concurrent user where one of the marks is already upon the Register:—Held: the amendment to sect 21 gives this power, & on a consideration of the facts registration ought to be allowed.—Re SIMPSON, ROBERTS & CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1922), 39 R. Ltd.* applied to register a trade mark in class 42 in respect of pickles & vinegar, consisting of a swan within an oval, having above it the words "Swann & Co.," & beneath it the words "Birmingham & Stourport, Worcestershire." The Registrar refused to proceed with the registration of this mark on the ground mainly that it so nearly resembled a mark already registered by B. & co. for goods in the same class that it would be calculated to deceive within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 19. II. Ltd. appealed to the ct., who ordered B. & co. to be served with notice of the appeal. This was done, & B. & co. appeared to resist the application for an order to proceed with the registration. The evidence showed that the marks had been used concurrently for a considerable number of years, & that there was no evidence of any confusion having occurred.—Held : the mark did not so resemble the mark already on the Register as to be calculated to deceive, & the Registrar should proceed with the registration in the ordinary way.—Re HOLBROOKS, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1909), 26 R. 288. User with knowledge of registration of nearly identical mark.]—An American co. in 1914 applied for the registration of two labels as trade marks in class 12 in respect of hack saw blades. The labels included the word "Victor" with the words trade mark added & the name of appets. The word "Victor" was the most prominent feature of the labels & had been used by appets. on their hack saw blades which had been largely imported into this country since about the year 1904 & was registered in most foreign countries. In 1909 appets. had applied for registration of the word "Victor" for the same goods but the application was opposed by an English co. who were the registered proprietors of a trade mark registered for the same goods & consisting of the word "Victory" in combination with a laurel wreath & the application was in 1910 refused by the Registrar of Trade Marks. The present applications were refused by the Registrar of Trade Marks, on the grounds that they raised substantially the same point as had been decided on the previous application & that registration was prohibited by Trade Marks Act 1905 (c. 15), s. 19, by reason of the existence on the Register of the "Victory" mark as well as in the exercise of his discretion. Appets. appealed & also relied on honest concurrent user & asked the ct. to exercise its jurisdiction under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 21, & direct the applications to proceed. The English co. was served with the notices of motion & appeared on the hearing & opposed the applications. Their trade mark was registered as an old mark :—Held : the applications were equivalent to a fresh application to register the word "Victor" as a trade mark there being nothing distinctive in either label except that word & that the Registrar was right on this & the other grounds in his refusal to proceed with the applications; the word "Victor" was not a word having no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods & that the labels were not registrable otherwise than on a special application under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & on the applications under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 21, the appets. had used the word "Victor," & not the labels, as their trade mark, & that the evidence did not establish user by them of the labels, as trade marks, & the user by appets. having been modern & the greater part of it at all events with full knowledge of the English co.'s registration the ct. would not in any case have exercised its discretion under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 21, in appets.'s favour. In any circumstances the ct. would not have permitted registration of a label which contained a statement that "Victor" was appets.'s trade mark.—Re MASSACHUSETTS SAW WORKS' APPLICATION (1918), 35 R. So far as regards other goods it will be treated as a new mark, & will not be registered if it clashes with another mark which is old in respect of those goods. He alleged foreign user since 1869, & that he had registered abroad & claimed to have his trade mark registered here as an old mark under the "three-mark rule":—Held: the resemblance between the two trade marks was so close that the later one must have been copied from the earlier; there was no evidence of the user of the appet.'s trade mark in England; had it been attempted to be used in England appet. could have been restrained by an injunction; foreign user alone could not entitle appet. to registration or bring him within the operation of the "three-mark rule" as being contemporaneous user before Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), & the application must be refused with costs.—Re MUNCH'S APPLICATION (1883), 50 L. 303. Word designating particular class of machine.—(1) H. & co. registered the word "Albion" as a trade mark, alleging use before 1875. They brought an action for infringement against W. & co. The alleged infringement consisted in taking a finger, marked "Albion," from one of plifs.' machines & putting it on to one of defts.' machines:—Held: defts. had not infringed.

(2) Defts moved to rectify the Register by expunging the trade mark, or limiting the registration to certain specified goods. Plifs. admitted that they had only used the trade mark before 1875 on the specified goods, & therefore did not oppose the proposed limitation. That they resisted the motion so far as it asked for an order to expunge:—Held: plifs. had only used the word Albion to denote design, & not as a trade mark, & therefore defts. were entitled to an order to expunge, but by agreement an order was only made for limitation of the registration to the specified goods, subject to the Comptroller-General not objecting to an order in that form.

If I did not come to that conclusion [use of mark as design], I should be forced to the conclusion that he was only properly registered for certain articles on his own evidence. He could not possibly, because he used "Albion" for mowers, reapers, chaff cutters, & other things, register it for all agricultural & horticultural implements, & all other machinery, which is what he has done. It was never intended that a man having a trade mark for one class of machinery, should register it as a trade mark for all. But I need not go further into that, because I think that, if he really had only used the word "Albion" as designating a particular construction or class of machine, he did not use it as a trade mark before 1875. Therefore he ought not have been placed on the Register as the owner of a trade mark; & therefore the Register, being in that sense improper, must be rectified (KEKEWICH, J.), HARRISON v. WOODROFFE, Re HARRISON'S TRADE MARK (1889), 7 R. P. C. 25.

H. T. & Co., brewers, applied for leave to register a trade mark for beer, which they claimed to have used since 1872, & which consisted of a red diamond containing a representation of a lion with a fleur de lis. The application was opposed by B. & Co., brewers, who were the proprietors of a trade mark registered in 1876, which consisted of a red diamond, & had been very extensively used since several years prior to H. T. & Co.'s application. The evidence as to appct.'s user, though showing some sales under the mark, was not satisfactory as to its extent:—Held: (1) appct.'s mark so nearly resembled the opponents' mark as to be calculated to deceive; (2) appct. had not shown a sufficient user of their mark to have acquired a concurrent right with the opponents.—Re HODSON, TESSIER & CO.'S TRADE MARK (1881), 86 L. 307. ——An application was made to register the word "Emollio" as a trade mark in respect of "an article of perfumery," on the ground that the word was "a special & distinctive word used as a trade mark before Aug. 13, 1875," within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 64 (3). The word in question had been used on the labels in connection with a perfumed cream by appct.'s father & predecessor in business, who died in 1867. It was doubtful whether, subsequently to that date, there had been any sale of the article. In 1870 appct. had destroyed all the labels, which had "Emollio" upon them, & the word was never subsequently used upon any perfumed cream. Since 1881 appct. had sold a solid tablet contained in boxes, the covers of which were inscribed with "Emollio Tablet, Registered." Certain price lists of perfumery dealers, issued in 1874 & subsequently, referred to Emollio Perfumed Cream & Emollio Tablet. The registration was opposed by persons who had sold a soap by the name of "Emolline," on the ground that the use of the word "Emollio" as a trade mark previously to 1875 had been abandoned:—Held: the use of the word "Emollio" on the labels on the perfumed cream had been abandoned, not only by cessation of the user, but also by the destruction of the labels in 1870, whereby an intention to abandon was clearly indicated.—Re GROSSMITH'S TRADE MARK, "EMOLLIO" (1889), 60 L. 309. Words not being fancy words.]—A motion was made to expunge from the register two trade marks, "Monopole" & "Dry Monopole," used in connection with champagne, & registered in 1882 by Heidsieck & co., of Rheims, under the Registration of Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10, as "special & distinctive word or words used as a trade mark before the passing of this Act."

The motion was made on the grounds (a) that the words were not special and distinctive; (b) that the words had not been used alone, but always in association with other words or marks. The alleged user related to labels, wrappers, corks, & packing cases. The label on each bottle bore the words "Monopole" or "Dry Monopole" in Roman letters, with the words "Heidsieck & co., Rheims, established 1875," underneath in a running hand. The wrapper round each bottle was substantially similar to the label. The corks were branded on the sides with the words "Monopole" or "Dry Monopole," & on the bottom with a comet with "Heidsieck & co.," round it.

The packing cases in which the wine was sold bore on one side the brand of "Monopole" & at one end the brand of "Heidsieck & co." in a circular or semi-circular form, & the word "Rheims" running across an anchor:—Held: in order to register a word or words of this kind, not being fancy words, it was necessary that they should have been used, & used by themselves, as trade marks before the passing of the Act.—RICHARDS v. BUTCHER, [1891] 2 Ch. 522; 63 L. T. 757; affd., [1891] 2 Ch. p. 540; 60 L. J. Ch. 530; 8 R. P. C. 249, C. A.

311. ——To entitle a person to register a word used as a trade mark before Aug. 13, 1875, as a trade mark, it is essential to show that it was (1) "special & distinctive" of his goods, & (2) that it was used as a trade mark.

(3) A trade mark may be infringed by being used in the advertisements & circulars of a rival trader, if it is used in them in relation to, or connection with the same class of goods & in such a manner as to be calculated to deceive.

(4) Delay in moving to rectify the register by expunging therefrom a trade mark will as a general rule deprive a successful appct. of his costs; but he may be refused relief altogether if his delay has placed resp. at an unfair disadvantage, e.g. if material evidence has been lost to resp. by reason of the delay.

was the figure of a "Swan," with adjuncts, & the other was the word "Swanbill." Both marks were registered as old marks in 1876 in respect of the same class of goods, & for many years were used together. In 1890 A. per incuriam allowed the registration of the word "Swanbill" to lapse, but in 1892 registered it again as an old mark. In 1901 he brought an action against B. & co. for infringing his trade mark of a "Swan" in their advertisements & circulars; & thereupon they moved to expunge both A.'s marks from the register. They had become aware in 1896 of the registration in 1892 of the word "Swanbill." The action & motion were tried together, & at the trial B. & co. abandoned their motion so far as it sought to expunge A.'s trade mark of a "Swan," but succeeded in expunging the word "Swanbill." The action was dismissed. Under the circumstances & having regard to B. & co.'s delay in moving to rectify the register, A. was ordered to pay only two-fifths of the taxed costs of the action & motion.

Def't. in 1868 registered at Stationers' Hall a similar preparation under the title of "Spalding's Universal Family Salve," & he had since manufactured & sold the salve under that name. Both salves were sold in packets encased in wrappers bearing the above titles in full, but the wrappers were so folded that until the packets were opened the words "Family Salve" alone were visible. In an action by pltfs. for an injunction:—Held: the words "Family Salve" were both a "distinctive heading," & also "special & distinctive words used before the passing of the Act," within Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10; pltfs. having by the registration acquired a prima facie right to the exclusive use of the two words "family salve," the onus lay on def't. to displace that right; & def't. having failed to discharge that onus, an injunction must be granted.—*REINHARDT v. Therefore, where the old mark sought to be registered is a label consisting of a distinctive device & words or letters, it is registrable under sect. 64 (2), & the words or letters must be disclaimed, notwithstanding the circumstance that if the words or letters were used alone they could be registered as an old mark under sect. 64 (3) (ii).—*Re WRIGHT, CROSSLEY & CO.'S APPLICATION & ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. 315. — Mark distinctive by user.]—C. & Co. in 1876 registered as a trade mark the words "Excelsior Spring Mattress." In 1883 they commenced an action in the Palatine Ct. of the Duchy of Lancaster against B. to restrain him from using their trade mark "Excelsior." B. moved to remove their trade mark from the Register on the ground that the word "Excelsior" had not been used as a trade mark before the passing of Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91). It appeared that the word had been used on bills & notices, but always applying to a mattress made under a patent of B.'s predecessors in business which expired in 1883; that it had been used in combination with a device of a man & a banner on metal plates which were affixed to the mattresses; that an india rubber stamp containing the words alone had been made, & was usually impressed upon the side of the mattress, & that a photograph was constantly used in selling the goods which showed the mattress with a label attached, having on it only the words "Excelsior Spring Mattress":—Held: there had been sufficient user as a trade mark, & the mark was rightly put on the Register.—Re CHORLTON & DUGDALE'S TRADE MARK (1885), 53 L. Upon an application made in 1900 by a rival manufacturer for the removal of the mark from the register:—Held: (1) the word had been properly registered as a "special & distinctive word" within Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10, since appet. failed to show that the word had not been used by itself as a trade mark before the Act, whereas the evidence showed that the word had always been used before & since the passing of the Act to denote, not an article manufactured by a particular process, but an article identified with the name of the particular manufacturer.

(c) User in Same Form.

317. Necessity for user alone.]—P. registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches, alleging that he had used it as a trade mark before the passing of the Act. He also at the same time registered a label enveloping the boxes in which his matches were sold, which contained the words "braided fixed stars" in two places so as to be conspicuous on each side of the boxes, but also contained a number of other words. It was shown that at the time when P. introduced the term "braided fixed stars" the term "fixed stars" was known in the trade as denoting a particular class of fuseses, & that he had just bought a patent for enveloping the stems of fuseses with wire by means of a braiding machine. This patent expired in Aug. 1881. It appeared from the evidence that P. had not before the Act used "braided fixed stars" separately as a trade mark, or otherwise than as a part of the above-mentioned label. In Oct. 1881, an application was made by a rival trader to expunge the registration:—Held: (1) the registration must be expunged, for to entitle P. to register these words as a trade mark he must before the Act have used them as such alone, & not merely in conjunction with other words; (2) if they had been so used alone they ought not to have been registered, for they were only words properly descriptive of the patented article, & P. had no exclusive right to their use after the patent had expired.—Re PALMER'S TRADE MARK (1883), 24 Ch. 318. —.]—In order to entitle a person to register a trade mark under Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 10, consisting of special & distinctive words, or combination of figures or letters, used as a trade mark before the passing of that Act, the words must have been used as a trade mark by themselves, & not in conjunction with any other device.

In 1876 S. registered the words "Diamond Cast Steel" as a trade mark for steel & for files. The words were never used on goods by themselves, but always in combination with a device & a name. The words were, however, sometimes stamped on one side of the goods, whilst the device & name were stamped on the reverse side. Upon an application to rectify the register of trade marks by expunging this trade mark:—Held: the case was within the principles upon which Re Palmer's Trade Mark, No. 317, ante, was decided; & as there had been no separate user of the words as

319. —.]—Pltfs. & their predecessors had for a hundred years carried on a brewery at Stone, & their ale had become known as "Stone Ale." They had registered several trade marks which contained the words "Stone Ale" in combination with some device or the name of their firm; & in 1888 they registered as an additional trade mark the words "Stone Ale" alone. Deft. built a brewery at Stone over which he placed the words "Stone Brewery," & when that was objected to by pltfs., he altered it to "M.'s Stone Brewery," with a device containing the words "Stone Ale" & a monogram somewhat resembling pltfs.' trade mark. Pltfs. brought an action for an injunction, & deft. moved under the Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 71, to enter a disclaimer on the part of pltfs. of the exclusive use of the word "Stone" & otherwise to rectify the register:—Held: (1) the word "Stone" was not a word common to the trade, & consequently the case did not come within sect. 71, & the application for a disclaimer must be refused; (2) there being no evidence that pltfs. had used the expression "Stone Ale" by itself as a trade mark before Aug. 13, 1875, pltfs. could not register it as a trade mark under sect. 64 (3) of the same Act; (3) pltfs. had acquired by user a right to the use of the words "Stone Ale" within the principle of *Wotherspoon v. alone as a trade mark before the passing of the Act, & not merely in combination with other words. Before the passing of Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), applts. used the words "Perry Davis' Vegetable Plain Killer" as their trade mark for a medicine manufactured & sold by them. After the passing of the Act they registered the words "Pain Killer" as their trade mark under sect. 10. Upon a motion to amend the register:—Held: (1) the entry must be removed from the register, the words "Pain Killer" not having been used alone before the passing of the Act; (2) the words "Pain Killer" were not special & distinctive words within the meaning of sect. 10, there being nothing to distinguish goods manufactured by applts. from goods manufactured by other persons.—*PERRY DAVIS v. 321. —.— In 1882, Heidsieck & co., a French firm of champagne growers, registered, under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), the words "Monopole" & "Dry Monopole," as separate trade marks for separate kinds of champagne, on the ground of user of those marks before the Act; but they never had, in fact, used those words alone as marks; for upon the labels, wrappers, corks, & cases for their bottles they had always used them in conjunction with the name of the firm, "Heidsieck & Co.," which they also registered by itself in 1882 as a trade mark under the Act; & upon the corks & cases there were, besides, various devices which had been registered as trade marks under the Act. On the cases, "Monopole," or "Dry Monopole," appeared on one side alone, while on another side was "Heidsieck & Co.," alone, & on one of the ends was one of the firm's registered devices alone. The firm sold other brands of champagne under distinctive registered labels, bearing the name of the particular brand, & always the name of the firm underneath.

Upon a motion under the Act of 1875, & the Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883, & 1888, to expunge "Monopole" & "Dry Monopole" from the register of trade marks:—Held: those words had not been so "used as trade marks before the passing of the Act," within the meaning of sect. 10 of the Act of 1875, as to entitle Heidsieck & co. to have them registered; & they were accordingly ordered to be expunged from the register.—*RICHARDS v. 322. —.— K. & co., Ltd., applied to register as an old mark the word "Kinahan" in an oval. The application was opposed by a firm in which the name "Kinahan" occurred. It appeared that appets. had branded the proposed mark on the sides of the corks of all bottles containing the different kinds of liquors sold by them, but this was not the only mark on the corks, e.g. there was generally a seal impressed on wax, with the words "Kinahan & co., Cognac, Carlisle Buildings," or other similar words: some of the corks were not sealed, but in this case they were covered with capsules which bore the words "Dublin, Kinahan, London," or some such words. Labels, being either registered trade marks or parts of trade marks, with appets.' name & address, were also placed on the bottles, & these labels had usually a caution, "Please observe that the name 'Kinahan' is branded on the cork"; & some "Please observe that the name 'Kinahan' on the seal & label, & branded on the cork," or similar expressions. The user of the mark was therefore always accompanied with something else. Appets. had also registered trade marks in 1876:—Held: appets. had failed to discharge the burden which lay on them of showing that the proposed mark was used alone as a trade mark, & their application must be refused. The point whether a mark only used on the side of a cork, & therefore hidden, could be said to be used as a trade mark at all, left undecided.—Re KINAHAN & Co.'s APPLICATION (1893), 10 R. P. C. 393.

323. —.— M. D. & co., Ltd., applied for the registration in two classes of a device which prior to 1875, had been used by J. H., their predecessor in business. Their application was made in the name of J. H. & co. under which style J. H. was carrying on the business when he transferred it to appets. J. H. now opposed the application on several grounds, but mainly on the grounds, (a) that the device sought to be registered as an old mark, had never been used by itself as a trade mark before 1875, without some accompaniment; and (b) that the application was not made in the name of the co. alone entitled to make it according to Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), s. 41:—Held: technically the application was in form not made by the right party; the device was never used before 1875; without the name of "J. H." or "J. H. & co." in juxtaposition to it & on the same cases, & the application for registration could not therefore proceed.—Re HEDDLE (JAMES) & Co.'s APPLICATIONS (1903), 20 R. P. C. 599.

324. Necessity for user of whole mark.—(1) An appet. seeking to register as an old mark, a distinctive device & combination of words, must show that the whole combination, just as he proposes to register it, has been used in its entirety prior to Aug. 13, 1875.

325. Material alterations in mark—Substantially affecting identity.—On July 26, 1926, the Winterbottom Book Cloth Co., Ltd. applied to register two labels as trade marks which they claimed to have used with additions or alterations not substantially affecting their identity, since before Aug. 13, 1875. Each mark consisted of an oblong label with rounded top & line border & contained the Royal Arms. The mark No. 471,122 had been altered from the form in which it was originally used by substituting for the words "Sagar's Patent, Jan. 1861, No. 123" the word "Sagar's" & omitting the words, "Trade Mark. Two red lines on each salvage full length of the piece." The Mark No. 471,123, had been altered from the form in which it was originally used by adding above the Royal Arms a Double Coat of Arms, by omitting the words "Broughton Dye Works, Manchester" & omitting the word "Patent" &

"1871, No. 398." The Registrar refused the applications on the ground that there were material alterations to the marks as originally used substantially affecting their identity:—Held: the Registrar having decided that these were variations in the marks as tendered from those originally used which were calculated to affect the identity of the new labels with the old, & having exercised his discretion against registration, that exercise of his discretion ought not to be interfered with.—Re WINTERBOTTOM BOOK CLOTH CO., LTD.'S APPLICATIONS (1927), 44 R. P. C. 402.

SUB-SECT. 10.—ASSOCIATED TRADE MARKS.

See Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), ss. 24–27.

326. Necessity for association—Same goods or description of goods.—(1) A co. which carried on several separate & distinct businesses registered the trade mark "B.S.A." in class 19 in respect of arms, ammunition, & stores. They subsequently applied to register the same trade mark in class 22 in respect of cycles, motor cycles, & automobiles. The Registrar required them, as a condition of registration, to agree that the marks should be associated in accordance with Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 24.

On appcts. declining this condition, the Registrar, in the exercise of his discretion under s. 12 (2), of the Act, declined to register the mark:—Held: the discretion vested in the Registrar was not an absolute discretion, but one to be exercised subject to the provisions of the Act. Sect. 24 was one of such provisions, & had nothing to do with the registration of identical trade marks, but of marks "so closely resembling a trade mark of appt. already on the register for the same goods or description of goods as to be calculated to deceive or cause confusion if used by a person other than appt.;" (2) the two classes of goods in question were also not the "same goods or description of goods," & the registrar must be directed to proceed with the registration of the mark in class 22 without the condition of association; (3) appcts., although successful, must pay the costs of the Registrar, who was a public official occupying a fiduciary position, & had done nothing to disentitle himself to costs.—Re BIRMINGHAM SMALL ARMS CO.'S APPLICATION, [1907] 2 Ch. 396; 76 L. 327. Inapplicability of decisions.—In In re Farbenfabriken Application, No. 22, ante. NORTH, J. said he did not see how he could hold "somatose" to be an invented word within Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1888 (c. 50), s. 10 (5) (d), having regard to the decisions with respect to such words as "Herbalin" "Washerine" & "Valvoline." All these decisions had reference to the provisions of Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 64, with regard to fancy words. In my opinion none of the decisions on that part of the original sect. have any bearing on the new provisions to be found in the substituted sect. the purpose of which was, I think, to get rid of expressions which had occasioned much embarrassment & of all the distinctions & decisions which had been founded upon them. These decisions so far from affording any guide to the true interpretation of the particulars designated (d) & (e) in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), are likely to lead to error if applied to these new provisions (LORD HERSHELL).—*EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. v. 336. — — —. — [Subject to the limitations imposed by Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), the Registrar has a discretion to refuse or accept an application for the registration of a mark, but his exercise of that discretion must not be unreasonable or capricious. G., trading as O. G. & Co., applied to register the word "Ogee" as a trade mark in class 3. O. G. & Co. were an old firm. They had many years ago used first the letters "O. G.," the initials of the firm, & afterwards the word "Ogee" to distinguish their goods. In 1898 & 1903 they had, without opposition registered "Ogee" in different classes, & had used the word as a trade mark in respect of goods in class 3, & their goods were known & sold as "Ogee" goods. The Registrar refused the application on the ground that "Ogee" was simply the letters O. G. spelt out, & that letters could not be registered as distinctive marks:—Held: Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 12 (2), expressly gave the Registrar a discretion, & it was also clear that whilst the Registrar was in certain cases prohibited from registering, still he had in cases where there was no such prohibition a discretion which must not be unreasonably or capriciously exercised. In the present case the Registrar was right in refusing the application. If the application had been for the registration of the letters "O. G." it would have failed. "Ogee," although a dictionary word, represented the letters "O. G." written out. A trade mark appealed to the ear as well as the eye, & possible confusion might arise from the sound. The disclaimer of the exclusive right to use the letters themselves did not meet the case.—Re GARRETT'S APPLICATION, [1916] 1 Ch. 436; 85 L. J. Ch. 350; 114 L. T. 976; 60 Sol. Jo. 401; 33 R. P. 337. — — —. — (1) Appet. for registration of a trade mark has no absolute right, in cases where registration is not prohibited by the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), to have the mark registered, but the registrar has a discretion whether to register or not, and the ct. will not interfere with his discretion except where he has gone clearly wrong.

(2) "Adapted to distinguish" means adapted to distinguish in this country, having regard to the practice & conditions of the trade here.

An application by a firm of canvas hose manufacturers to register, in respect of hose, a trade mark consisting of three parallel red lines woven in the hose throughout its whole length was opposed by several rival firms, & registration was refused by the registrar. Appets. had not used this mark on goods sold in this country, but had used it for many years on goods exported to other countries, where it had become identified with their goods. In 1914 appets. obtained registration of a trade mark for hose consisting of two blue lines with a red one between them running the whole length of the hose, on proof that the mark had been used by them for many years in this country. The opponents proved that the use of coloured lines running the length of the hose was prevalent in the trade, & that in many cases these lines were put on the hose at the order of a customer to indicate ownership or to distinguish one set of hose from another:—Held: in the circumstances, the proposed mark was not adapted to distinguish the goods of appets. & the registrar had rightly refused registration.—*BANHAM (GEORGE) & Co. v. 338. — — —. — [On Aug. 25, 1927, an application was made to register in class 39, as a trade mark in respect of paper forms, files, & stationery, a mark consisting of the words "Fanfold Ltd." above a scroll with flourishes at each end. The application was refused by the Registrar, on the grounds that the name "Fanfold Ltd." was the sole important feature of the mark, & was not represented in a special or particular manner, that the device of a scroll, its only other feature, was a well-known one, which any printer might use, & with nothing distinctive about it, that the mark consisted of little else than the word "Fanfold" which, being a combination of two ordinary English words, did not constitute an invented word, & that the word either had direct reference to the character and quality of the goods in connection with which it was sought to register it, or else was calculated to deceive.

Appet. appealed to the ct. The appeal was dismissed. It was held that the Registrar had correctly decided that the mark was not distinctive, that the word "distinctive" in Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), was indicative of a standard to which the Registrar had to have regard, that the Registrar's construction of the Act was in this case right & that the ct. would not interfere with his decision. Appet. appealed to the Ct. of Appeal:—Held: the Registrar had decided that the name of appet. was not represented in a special or particular manner & this decision was right, & moreover, that the ct. could not interfere with the exercise of his discretion by the Registrar.

A mark must, in order to be registered under any of the paragraphs of sect. 9 of Trade Marks Acts, 1907-1919, be distinctive.—Re FANFOLD LTD.'S APPLICATION (1928), 45 R. P. C. 325, C. A.

339. — — —. — [An application was made for the registration of a trade mark in respect of hosiery included in class 38. The mark consisted of a picture underneath which were the words "'Cabaret' Girl Hosiery." The application was opposed by the owners of a registered trade mark applicable to articles of clothing & consisting of a picture underneath which was the word "Carnival." The opponent was also the owner of a common law trade mark consisting of a picture similar to that in his registered trade mark but having upon it the words "Carnival hose," he had applied to register a mark similar to his common law mark but with the word "Columbine" upon

a. Necessity for user.—It is the use of a trade mark, & not its invention, which creates the right to its registration. In cases of conflict as to prior user the test is: which claimant was the first to use the mark on his

it. The registrar refused to register the mark of appets., & they appealed to the ct. :—Held: even if the evidence that had been before the registrar & upon which he had acted would have induced the ct. to come to a conclusion different from that to which the registrar had come, in the circumstances the ct. could not interfere because it could not be said on that evidence that the registrar in coming to the conclusion to which he had come had acted capriciously or unreasonably.—*Re DISTRIBUTING CORPN. Foreign trade marks—Necessity for compliance with requirements of English Act—Trade mark must be within statutory definition.]—Sect. 103 of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888, does not authorise the registration of a trade mark outside the definition of a trade mark given by sect. 64.—Re CARTER MEDICINE CO.'S TRADE MARK, [1892] 3 Ch. 472; 61 L. 341. — Time for application—Within four months of application in foreign country.]—A co. had, in America, where they had carried on business, registered a trade mark in 1885. Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act was passed in Aug. 1883, & sect. 103 enacted that if Her Majesty was pleased to make any arrangement with a foreign state for the mutual protection of trade marks, then any person who had applied for protection of a trade mark in such foreign state should be entitled to registration under the Act, provided that the application was made within four months from applying for protection in the foreign state. The International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property was signed in Paris in Mar. 1883, & it contained a provision that every trade mark registered in the country of origin should be admitted to registration, & protected in all countries of the Union. The Convention was in Mar. 1884, acceded to by the Govt. of Great Britain, & in July, 1887, by the Govt. of America, & the provisions of sect. 103 of the Act were by an Order in Council in July, 1887, made applicable to America. In Feb. 1888, the co. applied to the Comptroller-General to register their trade mark under the provisions of sect. 103, & of the International Convention; & he refused to do so. On appeal to the ct. :—Held: the application for registration could be dealt with only under the provisions of the Act of 1883; & as it was not made within four months as required by the provisions of sect. 103, it must be refused. Seemle: the provisions of the Convention of 1883, which stated that every trade mark duly registered in the country of origin should be admitted for registration & protection in the form originally registered in all the countries of the Union, now bound Great Britain, but the Act of 1883 did not afford the means of carrying out the provisions of the Convention.—Re CALIFORNIAN FIG SYRUP CO.'S TRADE MARK (1888), 40 Ch. 343. Sheffield Register—Transference to register of unregistered marks assigned by Cutlers' Company—Ministerial not judicial Act.]—W. & Sons were the registered owners of a trade mark of a tobacco pipe, stamped on metal, in respect of class 12 in the schedule to the rules under Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), viz. cutlery & edge-tools. L. was the registered owner of a trade mark of a pipe & dart stamped in respect of class 12, & also in respect of other classes relating to machinery & metal goods. Both were old marks issued by the Cutlers' Company many years ago. L.'s mark had been re-granted in 1839 to X., a freeman of the company, & this was the last entry in the books of the company. No registration of this mark had been made under Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), in the London register established under that Act for Sheffield marks. X. had assigned the mark to J. & Co., & on their business being taken by L. the pipe & dart mark had been assigned to a trustee for him. Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 81 (1), provides for the establishment of a new temporary register of trade marks at Sheffield; sub-sect. 2 enacts that the Cutlers' Company shall enter in the Sheffield register in respect of cutlery & other steel & iron goods, marks on the register established under the Act of 1875 belonging to persons carrying on business in Hallamshire or within six miles of it, & also enter in such register in respect of the same goods all the trade marks which shall have been assigned by the Cutlers' Company & actually used before the commencement of the Act, but not registered under the Act of 1875. Other sub-sects. provide for the registration of new trade marks by the Cutlers' Company. Sub-sect. 12 provides for an appeal to the comptroller by any person aggrieved by a decision of the Cutlers' Company subject to a further appeal to the ct. The marks on the Cutlers' register at Sheffield were to be put on the central register, & after a lapse of five years the new Sheffield register was to be closed. L.'s trade mark was not put on the register in the first instance by the Cutlers' Company, but on Sept. 16, 1887, on application made by L., the Cutlers' Company entered the mark on the Sheffield register in the name of L. This application was opposed by W. & Sons, but the Cutlers' Company refused to consider their opposition, & the comptroller declined to interfere on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. W. & Sons then moved to set aside the refusal of the Cutlers' Company & of the comptroller to hear their opposition to registration; or, in the alternative, to have the register rectified under sect. 90 of the Act of 1883, but the judge dismissed the application on both points:—Held: the Cutlers' Company & the comptroller had a mere ministerial duty to perform—viz., to enter on the new register the old corporate mark, & their so acting was not a decision under sub-sect. 12 of sect. 8.—Re LAMBERT'S TRADE MARK (1889), 61 L. party.]—R. J., a merchant in Manchester, for some time prior to the passing of Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), shipped cotton drills to A. & co., a firm at Manilla, for sale on commission, the goods, in common with other goods, sold by A. & co. for other people, bearing a trade mark representing the figure of Britannia, which mark was the property of A. & co. After the passing of the Act, doubts having arisen as to the propriety of using the Britannia mark, R. J. wrote to A. & co., suggesting the use of a new design; & they sent back a proposed trade mark which represented the house of business at Manilla of A. & co., with their name on the signboard. Beneath were three columns in Chinese characters. The first represented "R. J., Manchester," the second contained the crest of K., the Manilla partner of A. & co., with words indicating that it was his "chop" or mark, & the third represented "A. & co., Manilla." On the construction of the letters between the parties, the ct. held that there was no contract that the mark should be the property of R. J.:—Held: R. J., after the termination of the joint adventure, was not entitled to register the trade mark in his name.—Re JONES' TRADE MARK (1885), 53 L. T. 1, C. A.

345. Application by inventor of mark.]—A foreign co. applied to register a mark consisting of the word "Val" in respect of all substances used as food or as ingredients in food. The application was opposed by the co.'s sole agent in this country on the grounds that the word was invented by him, that the co. was instructed to manufacture goods under the mark solely for him for sale within the British Empire, & that the expenses of advertising the mark had been borne by him:—Held: the mere fact of suggesting the word "Val" gave the opponent no claim to registration; the facts indicated a joint adventure; the mark should be registered in the joint names of appets. & the opponent; & the application should be allowed to proceed on the parties agreeing to this.—Re NAAMLOOZE VENNOTSCHAP FABRIEK VAN CHOCOLADE EN SUKERWERKEN, KLOEKE & Co.'s APPLICATION (1923), 40 R. 346. Application during action for infringement—Directions as to mode of hearing.]—Defts. in an action for infringement of trade mark having applied for the registration of the trade mark which they had been restrained by injunction from using, order made that the manner in which the matter should be brought before the ct. should be by motion by appets. to proceed with the registration, with liberty to either party to use the evidence in the action for infringement, & with further provisions as to evidence.—Re JOHNSTON'S TRADE MARK (1880), 43 L. T. 672.

347. Right of applicant to appoint agent—Validity of notices to agent.]—Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 63, is retrospective in its operation. There is nothing in Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), to take away the common law right of an appct. for registration who is sui juris to appoint an agent for all the purposes of his application, & if he does so the notices required by the Act may properly be sent to him through such agent.

S., a foreigner, applied in 1876, through an English trade mark society, for registration of a trade mark. The Cutlers' Co. gave notice of a similar mark which had been assigned by them, & the Registrar thereupon wrote to S. at the society's address to say that he could not proceed with the application until S. had obtained the leave of the ct. This letter was never communicated to S. by the society, who proceeded no further with the application; but S. having seen the advertisement of his application in the Trade Marks Journal believed that his mark had been registered, & N., an agent of his, sold goods in England marked with his mark. In the year 1877 plffs. registered a mark resembling the Cutlers' mark, & in 1883 brought an action against N. to restrain him from infringement, & S., finding his mark was not on the Register, then made a fresh application for registration:—Held: (1) S. was "in default," & his original application must be deemed to have been "abandoned" within the meaning of Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 63, & could not now be proceeded with. (2) S. being under no disability from laches or conduct was not barred either by Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 3, or by Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 76, & was entitled to make a fresh application for registration.—*JACKSON & Co. v. 348. Special application—To court Indication of parties to be served—Power of court where parties not served.]—(1) Even if the ct. is satisfied that a proposed mark is adapted to distinguish the goods of appct. from those of other persons, it will not order it to be deemed distinctive under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), if the mark ought not to be registered for some other reason.

The Royal Worcester Corset Co., which carried on business as manufacturers of corsets at Worcester in the United States, applied under the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, for the registration of the words "Royal Worcester" in class 38 as a trade mark in respect of corsets generally. These words had been used for some years upon & in connection with advertisements of corsets manufactured by the co. in America & sold in this country, but with additional words indicating that the goods were made in America. The co. did not enjoy royal patronage:—Held: the words "Royal Worcester" were not in themselves "distinctive" within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9, & there was no evidence that, used alone, they were in fact distinctive of the co.'s goods; but the application ought also to be refused on the ground that the words, used alone, suggested Royal patronage, & were therefore "calculated to deceive" within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 11.

(2) It is a convenient practice that the Board of Trade, in directing an application for registration of a trade mark to be made to the ct., should indicate the parties on whom the application is to be served. If appct. does not serve any party so indicated, the ct. can at its discretion proceed without such service or direct it to be made.—Re ROYAL WORCESTER CORSET CO.'S APPLICATION, [1909] 1 Ch. 459; 78 L. Form of order.]—An Italian co. who were makers of motor cars applied under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), to register the word "Itala" as a trade mark for motor cars. The application was referred by the Board of Trade to the ct. The application was resisted by an English co. who were concessionaires for sale of the Italian co.'s "Itala" cars, & who had sold & advertised them, on the ground that the public had come to connect the word "Itala" with themselves rather than with the Italian co.: Held: it being clear that, to the ordinary public an "Itala" car meant a car of a particular make, the word was capable of registration under sect. 9 (5) & the Registrar ought to be enabled to proceed; & if there was any real substance in the opponents' case it could be raised by an opposition in the usual way. The proper form of order in such cases having been considered, an order was made that for the purpose of the application to the Registrar the mark applied for was to be deemed a distinctive one within Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9 (5), & the Registrar do accept the application & proceed with the same accordingly.—Re ITALIA FABBRICA DI AUTOMOBILI'S APPLICATION (1910), 54 Sol. 350. Second application—In respect of same trade mark—Registration not completed on first application.]—In 1887, application was made for the registration of a trade mark for whisky. The mark consisted of a label which bore on it the device of a ship upon the sea, & also the words "Unco Guid." The Registrar allowed the application, & the mark was advertised in the Trade Marks Journal, but, in consequence of the omission of appct.'s agent to pay the registration fee, the mark was not actually registered. Appct. was ignorant of this omission, & believed that the mark had been registered, & in this belief he proceeded to use it in his trade. In 1893 he discovered that the mark had not been registered, & he then renewed his application for registration. The Registrar refused the application, on the ground that in 1889 another mark had been registered for whisky, to which he thought the first mark had such resemblance as to be calculated to deceive. The second mark consisted of a label which bore the device of two lions rampant standing on opposite sides of a bottle, & also the words "The Unco Guid." The owner of this mark had, when he applied for its registration, disclaimed any right to the exclusive use of the words. The owner of the first mark made a similar disclaimer:—Held: (1) having regard to the disclaimers, there was no such resemblance between the two marks as was calculated to deceive, & the first mark ought to be registered; (2) the non-completion of the registration under the first application was not a bar to the making of a second.—Re LOFTUS' TRADE MARK, [1891] 1 Ch. 193; 63 L. Application was made to have the marks re-registered as old marks, but this application was opposed by two other firms & was refused by the registrar on the ground of there not being sufficient evidence of user as old marks. W. H. & S., having obtained more complete evidence, again applied for the re-registration, & this was refused by the registrar on the ground of res judicata. W. H. & S. appealed to the ct. The motion was ordered to stand over to enable the two firms who had opposed to be served. On the motion coming on for hearing, it was ordered that the Registrar be directed to proceed with the registration, owing to the two firms not desiring to oppose at that stage. 357. Duty of opponent to apply for directions as to mode of trial.—Where an oppose application for the registration of a trade mark stands for the determination of the ct. under rule 16 of the Trade Mark Rules, 1876, the proper course for the purpose of raising the question is for the Registrar to require the opponent to apply for a direction as to the mode of trial, whereupon the person seeking to register is usually directed to take out a summons which is adjourned into ct. A motion on behalf of the opponents for an injunction to restrain the proposed registration is irregular, for the application to the ct. referred to in rule 44 of the Trade Mark Rules, 1876, means an application by the person seeking to register.—Re SIMPSON, DAVIES & SON'S TRADE MARK (1880), 15 Ch. 358. Evidence in support—Insufficient to support motion for injunction.—(1) An adverse user in this country for fifty years of a trade mark belonging to a foreign proprietor does not necessarily make it publici juris where such user began in fraud & is still calculated to deceive.

In 1718 G.'s firm, who were the foremost manufacturers of iron in Sweden, registered in Sweden as their trade mark the letter L. enclosed in a hoop. In 1877 they registered in England the said hoop L. mark alone, & also in combination with the word "Leufsta." Since 1835 they had exported iron to England for the manufacture of a peculiar kind of steel known as blister steel, on which they used the hoop L. mark in combination either with the name of their English consignee or with the word "Leufsta" or with both, which they registered in Sweden as additional stamps to their hoop L. mark. H.'s firm, who were English iron & steel manufacturers, had, for fifty years past, used the said hoop L. mark in combination with the name of their firm as their trade mark upon blister steel manufactured by them from inferior brands of Swedish iron. For this purpose it was necessary to cut off the Swedish mark, as blister steel retained upon its surface every mark made upon the original iron. A similar practice also prevailed with some 30 other English firms; but this practice was not brought to G.'s knowledge until 1881. H. applied under Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), to register the hoop L. mark in combination with the words "Brad's Co., Warranted":—

Held: the mark had not become common, & the application must be dismissed.

(2) Semble: an opposition to registration may be sustained on evidence which would be insufficient to support a motion for an injunction.

(3) Semble: the fact that a trade mark has been used for a great number of years is not of itself an absolute bar to the obtaining of an injunction restraining the use of it, but the onus is upon those who object to its use to show that such use was originally fraudulent, & that it is still calculated to deceive; & where the user has extended over a very long period, proportionately strong evidence will be required to induce the ct. to grant an injunction.—Re HEATON'S TRADE MARK (1884), 27 Ch. 360. Who may oppose—Persons entitled to use common device.—T. & B. applied to register "Ancross" as a trade mark for umbrellas. H. & Y. opposed as the registered proprietors of an old trade mark, No. 9858, of which the material part was the device of an anchor. This mark was registered in 1876 by B. & co., who in 1881 transferred it to G. & K., who in 1891 assigned it to H. & Y. The Registrar disallowed the opposition & allowed registration of "Ancross," being of opinion that the assignment of 9858 was an inoperative assignment, & was taken by H. & Y. for the purpose of embarrassing T. & B. in their business. H. & Y. appealed, & the appeal being referred to the ct., came before the judge, who after the argument by counsel, stated that he thought "Ancross" was within Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 72, & therefore he could do nothing if 9858 remained on the Register. He accordingly gave T. & B. leave to move to expunge it, & postponed judgment. T. & B. moved to expunge & filed affidavits that in 1876, when 9858 was registered by B. & co., there were three or more other umbrella manufacturers using the device of an anchor. Counsel for H. & Y. stated that on this evidence they could not resist the motion to expunge, on the ground that in 1876 the device of an anchor was common to the umbrella trade:—Held: (1) the device of an anchor being common to the trade in 1876, Trade mark 9858 must come off the Register, & the motion to expunge it would be allowed with costs; (2) the application to Register "Ancross" ought not to be allowed, as it was applied for in order that it might be used with a view to deceive, & although H. & Y. could not oppose on the basis of trade mark 9858, which was expunged, they could do so as persons entitled to use the common device of an anchor, & to prevent T. & B. from obtaining the monopoly of "Ancross" which was like "Anchor."—Re THWILS & BLAKEY'S TRADE MARK, Re HUGHES & YOUNG'S TRADE MARK (1893), 9 T. The sect. throws the onus of justifying a disclaimer on those who seek to have it inserted; & disclaimers, unnecessary from a legal point of view, should not be placed on the Register, since they induce a disregard by the public of common law rights which may have been acquired to the use of the part disclaimed.—Re CADBURY BROTHERS' APPLICATION, [1915] 2 Ch. 307; 81 L. See Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), ss. 12, 11, Trade Marks Act, 1919 (c. 79), sched. II.

390. Mode of appeal—By way of application to amend register.—A person whose application to register a trade mark has been refused by the Comptroller cannot appeal direct to the ct. from such refusal, as a person aggrieved by the omission of his name from the Register under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, but must take the special course prescribed by sect. 62 (1), of appealing to the Board of Trade from the Comptroller's decision.—Re "NORMAL" TRADE MARK (1887), 35 Ch. 391. Function of court—Confined to hearing & determining appeal—Power to allow amendment of notice of opposition.—G. & co. gave notice of opposition to the registration by R. & co. of a trade mark. On the hearing of the application to register G. & co. desired to adduce evidence in support of other grounds of opposition not stated in their notice of opposition. The Registrar, representing the Comptroller, rejected the fresh evidence & disallowed the opposition. G. & co. did not apply to the Registrar for leave to amend their notice of opposition or for an adjournment, but appealed to the Board of Trade, who referred the appeal to the ct. On an application by G. & co. for leave to amend their notice of opposition: Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to allow an amendment of the notice of opposition, its functions being limited, under sect. 69 (4), of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 & 1888, to hearing & determining the appeal.—Re ROBERT-

392. Appeal to court—Order varied by House of Lords—Order of House made order of Chancery Division.—Where under the provisions of the Trade Marks Registration Acts the Registrar cannot proceed with the registration of certain marks without the leave of the ct. & the original order of the ct. is varied by the House of Lords, it is necessary that the order of the House of Lords should be made an order of the High Ct., Ch. Div.; & where the Registrar is served with notice of an application to the ct. for leave to be given him to proceed with a registration, & he appears, but does not oppose the application, he must be paid his costs of appearance.—Re ORR EWING & CO.'S TRADE-MARKS (1880), 28 W. R. 412.

393. Appeal to Board of Trade—Reference by Board to Court—Direction to serve specified persons—Service essential prior to hearing by court.—

A co. having applied to register a trade mark for extract of meat in class 42, the application was refused by the Comptroller-General for want of essential particulars in the mark. Appets. appealed to the Board of Trade, & the appeal was referred to the ct. By their directions the Board of Trade directed the proceedings to be served on another co., but appets. did not comply with the directions & only served the Comptroller-General. On a preliminary objection being taken on behalf of the Comptroller-General: Held: the ct. could not proceed until the other co. was served, & the proceedings were directed to stand over for the purpose of serving them, with liberty to amend.—Re EXTRACT OF MEAT (BARON LIEBIG) PHOTOGRAPH BRAND LTD.'S APPLICATION (1900), 17 R. P. C. 161.

394. Admissibility of grounds of opposition—Withheld on application to Registrar.—K. & J. Ltd. applied to register the word "Multigraph" in respect of stationery of all kinds included in class 39. They had used it for eighteen years on stationery goods of various kinds, some of which had to do with the duplicating & manifolding of documents, & it was proved that the word was well known in connection with their goods. The application was opposed by the American Multigraph co. & the International Multigraph co., the first mentioned co. being the manufacturers of a machine which they called the "Gammeter Multigraph," being a multiple typewriter & office printing press. The only ground of opposition stated in their notice was that the registration by appets. would injure the opponents' business, seeing that "Multigraph" had for some years formed part of their trading name in the United States of America & more recently in Great Britain & elsewhere in connection with the sale of "Gammeter Multigraphs" & accessories therefor. They adduced evidence of some user of the term "Gammeter Multigraph" in this country for about a year prior to the application for registration, but appets., when they became aware of it, objected to such user. It was held by the Registrar of Trade Marks that, the word having been the Trade mark of appets. for eighteen years, the use of it by other persons would cause confusion, & the opposition was disallowed.

PART I. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 8.

a. Jurisdiction of Court of Session.—A co., whose registered office was in Scotland, presented an appeal to the Ct. of Session, under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 12 (3) against the refusal by the Registrar of an application to register a trade mark. The ground of the refusal was that the trade mark did not satisfy the requirements of sect. 9 of the Act: Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, in respect that jurisdiction to entertain such an appeal was a

"special jurisdiction," within the meaning of sect. 69 of the Act, conferred upon the High Ct. of Justice in England alone.—BUCHANAN (JOHN & JAMES), LTD. v. COMPTROLLER-GENERAL OF PATENTS, DESIGNS & TRADE MARKS, [1928] S. C. 692.—SCOT.

The opponents appealed, & asked the leave of the ct. to rely on two further grounds of opposition, namely, first, that the word "Multigraph" was descriptive; & secondly, that appcts. had prior to their application advertised that word as their registered trade mark. The declarations which were before the Registrar included evidence on these points, but no application was made to him for leave to amend the notice of opposition, & the points were not relied on at the hearing before the Registrar.—Held: leave to bring forward the further grounds of opposition should not be given to the opponents.—Re KENRICK & JEFFERSON LTD.'S APPLICATION (1909), 26 R. 397. Dissolution of appellant company—Pending appeal.—An application was made by the English Record co., Ltd., who were then in liquidation to register a trade mark for certain goods included in class 8. This was opposed by the Gramophone co., who alleged that the mark would conflict with a well known trade mark belonging to it. The Registrar allowed the application to proceed. The opponents appealed, & while the appeal was pending the English Record co. was dissolved. On the appeal coming before the ct. the opponents asked that an order be made that the Registrar do not proceed with the registration. The Registrar asked that it should appear that the ct. expressed no opinion on the merits.

An order was made that the Registrar should not proceed with the registration, the order stating that the ct. expressed no opinion as to whether if appct. co had not been dissolved, the opposition would have been successful or not.—Re ENGLISH RECORD CO., LTD.'S APPLICATION (1914), 31 R. SUB-SECT. 9.—COSTS.

398. Jurisdiction of court—To interfere with costs before Registrar.—"The costs of & incident to all proceedings in the High Ct." (R. S. C., 1875, Ord. 55), means the costs of & incident to all proceedings that have actually come into the High Ct. A case under the Trade Marks Registration Acts, 1875-1877, does not "stand for the determination of the ct.," within the 16th rule of the Trade Marks Rules, 1876, until the parties opposing registration have given security for costs as provided by that rule. Upon an application by summons for the registration of a trade mark being refused with costs, the ct., in exercising the discretionary power given to it by R. S. C., 1875, Ord. 55, as to the costs "of & incident to all proceedings in the High Ct.," has only jurisdiction to order the payment of costs incurred since the case "stood for the determination of the ct.," under the Trade Marks Rules, 1876, r. 16 that is, from the time of the parties opposing registration giving security for costs as provided by that rule, & has no power to order payment of the costs of the previous proceedings before the Registrar of Trade Marks.—Re BRANDRETH'S TRADE-MARK (1878), 9 Ch. D. 618; 47 L. J. Ch. 816; 27 W. R. 281.

Taxation—Review of taxation.—The Registrar of Trade Marks having granted an application by W., C. & co. for the registration of their trade mark, an appeal was brought by the R. co., which was allowed by the judge. His Lordship gave the costs of the appeal to the R. co. except so far as they had been increased by certain issues, the costs of which were to be paid to W., C. & co. Upon the taxation of the costs, the taxing master disallowed the costs of a witness who had filed an affidavit upon which he had been cross-examined. The R. co. objected (inter alia) to the disallowance of these costs on the ground that the affidavit did not relate solely to the excepted issues. In his answer to objections, the taxing master overruled the objections. The R. co. took out a summons to review taxation:—Held: the decision of the taxing master was perfectly right; because the learned judge had distinctly separated the issues. Re WRIGHT, CROSSLEY & CO. registration an indefeasible title to the use of the mark as a trade mark if, by reason of its being at the time of registration in common use in the trade, it ought not to have been registered. The lapse of five years cannot make good a registration which was in its inception invalid. A trade mark which was originally improperly registered ought, even after the lapse of five years, to be removed from the register, because the registration might enable the person who has made it to commit a fraud:—Held: a mark which had been registered as a trade mark, was, at the time of registration, "common to the trade" because similar, though not in each case identical, marks were then in use by more than three persons engaged in the same trade, although in some of the cases the mark was not actually placed on the goods, but was only used on bill heads, trade circulars, advertisements, or show cards.—Re WRAGG'S TRADE MARK (1885), 29 Ch. 408. ———— [1]—(1) Notwithstanding sect. 76 of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883–88, & the variation in language between sect. 90 of those Acts & Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 5, the registration of a trade mark which has been wrongfully registered may be rectified after it has stood for upwards of five years.

(2) Where a trade mark consisting of an essential particular, combined with a device common to the trade, has been registered under Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), the register may, on the application of a person aggrieved, be rectified by adding a note stating that the added device is common to the trade.

(3) Where a trade mark has been registered with a claim of user prior to Aug. 13, 1875, & such trade mark was in fact not used as a whole before that date, the mark will be expunged from the Register on the application of a person aggrieved.

(4) In an action for infringement of a trade mark which is of a type in general use in the trade, it is important to show that the trade mark alleged to infringe, though generally similar to the trade mark alleged to be infringed, was not copied from it, & was adopted without an intention to deceive, & that no case of actual deception has taken place after several years' user. Under such circumstances the ct. declined to hold that defts.' mark was calculated to deceive, & dismissed the action, while accepting an undertaking offered by defts. to discontinue the use of a particular detail which might cause confusion.—BAKER v. RAWSON (1890), 45 Ch. D. 519; 63 L. T. 306; sub nom. BAKER & SONS v. RAWSON BROTHERS, Re BAKER & SONS' TRADE MARKS, Re RAWSON BROTHERS' APPLICATION, 60 L. J. A combined trade mark which has been registered for more than seven years is not open to objection solely on the ground that part of it consists of a particular device which was common to the trade at the date of the registration of the trade mark. But if in an action for infringement the alleged infringement is not the user of the trade mark as a whole, but the user of the particular device common to the trade, the action will fail & the proprietor of the combined mark may be required to place a note on the Register to the effect that no claim is made for the exclusive use of the particular device.—*WIGFULL (J.) & SONS, LTD. v. Pltfs. brought an action against defts. claiming injunctions to restrain them from infringing their trade mark & also from passing off. Defts. moved to expunge the mark from the Register:—Held: (1) pltf.'s claim for an injunction to restrain passing off wholly failed; (2) whether the mark was a device with words added or words in common use with a device, the abstraction from it of the words "Gripe Water" was an infringement, & sect. 44 as to non-interference with the use of any bona fide description of the character or quality of goods only applied to marks actually registered under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15); (3) although the mark could not be registered at the present time, having regard to the provisions of sect. 11 of the Act, yet at the date of registration it was a valid mark, & ought not now to be removed.—*Re WOODWARD'S TRADE MARK, WOODWARD, LTD. v. 411. ———— [1]—A tobacco co. was the registered owner of three trade marks for manufactured tobacco consisting, in part, of the Prince of Wales' feathers. The marks had been continuously used by the co. & their predecessors in title for a long series of years in connection with the sale of tobacco, & were all registered as old marks prior to 1905. No royal warrant had been granted to the co. for the right to use the feathers, nor, when a motion to expunge the marks was launched, were there any persons holding warrants from the present or any former Prince of Wales. Upon a motion by the Royal Warrant Holders' Assoc. under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 35, to have these three marks expunged from the register on the ground that they were contrary to law & calculated to deceive within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 11—Held: on the evidence, appets. had not established that the marks were calculated to induce the belief that resps. held a Royal warrant, but even if they had been, s. 11 of the Act had no application to marks which were in no sense contrary to law when registered, & the use of which at the present time was identical with that which had obtained ever since they were registered. The mere fact that the marks contained matter now no longer registrable did not supply any reliable criterion for determining whether they were contrary to law,

The evidence showed that pltf.'s was the only business in the trade known as "Short's," & that some few people had in fact mistaken deft.'s house for a branch of pltf.'s. Before deft.'s evidence was concluded an injunction was by consent granted, deft. paying an agreed sum for costs. On the motion to rectify:—Held: as the mark was an old one & had been on the Register for seven years & there was no suggestion of fraud, & it could not possibly be said that the mark was calculated to deceive, the motion to rectify failed.—*SHORT'S, LTD. v. In such a case it was not necessary for the judge making the order to ante-date his judgment, under the discretion conferred upon him by Ord. 41, r. 3, so as to bring it within the seven years, the initiation of the proceedings within the period being enough to give him jurisdiction.—Re KEYSTONE KNITTING MILLS TRADE MARK (1928), 97 L. J. Ch. 316; 45 R. P. C. 421, C. A.

In his application for registration, pltf. stated that the article in connection with which the mark was to be used was "a toilet requisite, being a machine to hold a reel of perforated paper." Pltf. sold both the machines & the reels or rolls of paper, which were intended to be used together. The two things could, however, be purchased separately. When a roll of paper had been used up, another could be fixed in the machine. Pltf. did not place the mark upon the machine, but he placed it on the wrappers in which his rolls of paper were sold. Deft. sold similar rolls of paper with the same mark on the wrappers:—Held: paper not being included in Class 6, the registration did not entitle pltf. to prevent deft. from using the mark in connection with his rolls of paper; but on the evidence an injunction was granted to restrain deft. from passing off his goods as pltf.'s.—*HART v. h. General trade mark.—While a general trade mark covers all the classes of merchandise in which appt. deals, & when registered prevents any subsequent registration of the same subject matter as a general trade mark, it would not confer an unlimited right to the mark the world over as against any one carrying on an entirely different business who applies for a specific trade mark consisting of the same mark as applied to goods of a different character not manufactured by the owner of the general trade mark.—Re GEBR NOBLE'S APPLICATION (1913), 11 Ezech. C. R. 499; 14 D. L. R. 385.—CAN.

420. Jurisdiction of court—Registered owner domiciled in Ireland.]—The High Ct. of Justice in England has jurisdiction, under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Acts, 1883 & 1888, to rectify the Register of trade marks kept under those Acts, notwithstanding that the registered proprietor of the mark affected is domiciled in Scotland or Ireland. Qu.: whether the Scottish or Irish cts. have a concurrent jurisdiction with the English cts. to rectify the Register.

No special procedure is prescribed by the Acts or rules as to the service on parties interested of notice of application to expunge a trade mark. Therefore it is sufficient if such notice is given as is required by natural justice.

Where the registered proprietor of a trade mark registered in England under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), was a British subject domiciled in Ireland, out of the jurisdiction of the English cts. & therefore could not be served with a notice of motion to expunge the trade mark, it was held sufficient to send him a copy of the notice of motion with a letter informing him that proceedings had been commenced which might affect his interests; & ct. heard the motion & made an order, although the registered proprietor did not appear. Re KING & CO.'S TRADE MARK, [1892] 2 Ch. 462; 62 L. 422. Discretion of court.]—Pltfs. had a large export trade in bottled beer & a small local trade in England. Defts. sold bottled beer in England only. Both sold beer in the north of London. In 1879 pltfs. registered as a new trade mark for beer a picture of a stout man, with the words "John Bull Brand"; & in 1886 they registered as a new mark for beer a label containing the old mark with some additional words. In 1884 defts., in ignorance of pltfs.' rights, adopted for their beer a label containing a picture of a fat man & the words "John Bull Registered"; & they continued this user after knowledge of pltfs.' marks. This label was not registered as a trade mark, but only registered at Stationers' Hall. Pltfs. moved to restrain defts. from infringing their trade marks & from passing off their beer as pltfs.' Defts. moved to have pltfs.' marks expunged. In the course of the trial it was discovered that the words "John Bull" had been used by another firm in connection with beer from 1875 to 1890, but their beer had only a local sale, & the use of those words was now abandoned:—Held: (1) assuming the registration of the words "John Bull" might have been successfully opposed, the ct. ought not now, in the exercise of its discretion under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, to order those words to be expunged; (2) pltfs. were entitled to an injunction both on the ground of trade mark & on the ground of their common law right, notwithstanding the absence of any evidence of actual deception.—PAINE & CO. v. In 1916 the goodwill & trade marks of the co. were sold in a debenture holders action to M. & assigned to him & in Nov. 1917, the co. was dissolved. On Nov. 30, 1917, a new co. was incorporated with the same name as the first co. & on Feb. 6, 1918, M. sold & assigned the goodwill & trade marks to the second co., but neither assignment had been registered when the time for renewal of the trade mark arrived in July, 1922. The usual notice as to renewal was sent by the Registrar to the address of the first co., but it was returned; & a second notice was sent to the address of the second co., as the Registrar had discovered that address, but was not aware that the second co. was a different co. In Apr. 1922, the second co. made an application for renewal & the registration was renewed as from July 14, 1922, & in June, 1922, the address on the register was altered to that of the second co.

In 1925 the second co. applied to register the assignment to them & they were registered as proprietors from Feb. 6, 1918. The second co. having commenced an action for infringement, defts. moved to rectify the Register by expunging the trade mark on the ground (inter alia) that the renewal was invalid, as there was then no registered proprietor in existence & the motion was heard on this point as a separate point:—Held: the trade mark was on the Register & would remain there unless removed; the ct. has under sect. 35 a discretion as to rectification of the Register; here the objection to the registration was based on a pure technicality which had been remedied; & the trade mark ought to remain on the Register.—Re MAGNETA TIME CO., LTD.'S TRADE MARK (1927), 44 R. 427. — — — — — The ct. rejected the owner's contention that an order to expunge his mark, which had been registered under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), should only be made subject to an application to amend being made by him within a reasonable time, but made an order to expunge the mark absolutely.—*DAY F. 428. — — — — — Grounds for removal same as grounds for opposing original registration—Opposition to registration unsuccessful Res judicata.—On a motion to expunge three trade marks from the Register an application was made to strike out certain grounds of objection to one of the marks on the ground that these objections had been already decided upon in a previous proceeding between the same parties, & that the matter was res judicata. In the opposition to the application to register this mark the I. M. co. had applied for leave to raise certain further grounds of objection, which application was dismissed by SWINFEN EADY, J. K. & J., Ltd., contended that the I. M. co. were not at liberty to raise these same objections on the motion, & that it was res judicata that the I. M. co. could not raise the objections, & moved to have them struck out. The I. M. co. contended that there was no estoppel on the motion to rectify, it being a different proceeding:—Held: it was not res judicata that the I. M. co. could not raise the objections, as the proceedings then before the ct. were different from the proceedings before (SWINFEN EADY, J.).—Re KENRICK & JEFFERSON LTD.'S THREE TRADE MARKS (1910), 28 R. 429. — — — — — Of mark dependent on registration of prior mark—Prior mark removed.—Pltf. Co., who were the proprietors of the letters patent for the well-known "Bowden Wire" used in connection with the transmission of power for cycle & motor cycle brakes, in 1901 promoted deft. co., & transferred to it that part of their business which was concerned with brakes for pedal cycles only. In 1903 pltf. co. registered a trade mark in class 13 for brakes for velocipedes, consisting of a picture of a coil of wire with the word "Bowden" enclosed therein, & they granted a licence to deft. co. to use this mark in connection with brakes for pedal cycles. The licence was limited to the continuance of the letters patent. In 1901 pltf. co. registered the same trade mark in class 13 in respect of component parts, attachments, & accessories, other than brakes, of velocipedes, etc. The directors of the two cos. were substantially the same until shortly before the commencement of the action. On the expiration of the letters patent deft. co. continued to use the mark not only on brakes for pedal cycles but also in respect of brakes for motor cycles, which they then began to manufacture. Pltf. co. brought an action to restrain deft. co. from using the trade marks on any goods manufactured by them. Dft. co. contended that the licence was ineffective, & that the mark had been used by them for a great number of years, not only with the knowledge but also with the concurrence of pltf. co. Dft. co. moved to expunge the trade marks, & alleged that they were not distinctive, & that they were calculated to deceive:—Held: both trade marks must be removed from the register as not being distinctive & as being calculated to deceive.—BOWDEN WIRE, LTD. v. BOWDEN BRAKE CO., LTD. (No. 1), Re BOWDEN WIRE, LTD.'S TRADE MARKS (1913), 30 R. P. C. 580, C. A.; on appeal, 31 R. P. C. 385, H. L.

432. Appeal—From order for rectification—Enlargement of time for appeal.—In Dec. 1915, an order was made by the judge rectifying the Register of Trade Marks by removing resps.' trade mark therefrom. No appeal from that order was entered by resps. within the time limited for appeal. In May, 1918, the Ct. of Appeal in another case dissented from the view taken by the judge of the construction of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), in resps.' case & overruled his decision. On an application by resps., under R. S. C., Ord. 58, r. 15, for an order enlarging the time for appealing from the order of the judge: Held: the ct. had power to enlarge the time for appealing, if it were just that, under all the circumstances, an order enlarging the time should be made, but that the present appts. had shown no sufficient ground for making the order, & their application must therefore be refused; the fact that in a subsequent case the Ct. of Appeal had taken a different view of the construction of an Act of Parliament from that taken by the judge in a previous case was not necessarily a ground for enlarging the time for appealing from his decision.

For the purposes of an application under R. S. C., Ord. 58, r. 15, there is no distinction in meaning between granting special leave to appeal under the rule as it originally stood & enlarging the time for appeal under the rule in its present form.—Re WIGFULL (J.) & SONS' TRADE MARKS, [1919] 1 Ch. 52; 88 L. 434. Failure to oppose registration or see advertisement of registration—Whether bar to application.]—(1) When a trade mark has been used by more than three persons engaged in the same trade, it is common to the trade, & cannot be registered by any one.

(2) A person who registers a trade mark does so at his own risk, & if he registers one which is common to the trade it will be removed from the Register on the application of the parties aggrieved, & he will have to pay the costs of the application. It makes no difference that he was the person who was the first to adopt the trade mark if it had become common at the date of registration.

In 1899 an American co. applied for the registration of the same word as their trade mark, they having used it for a long time in America & also more recently in England. This application was objected to by the Comptroller, in view of the previous registration. Thereupon inquiries were instituted by the co., the result of such inquiries being that the registered proprietor could not be found to have ever used the mark, or done any business either in America or in England; that he could not be traced in Chicago or elsewhere; that letters addressed to him at Chicago were returned through the Dead Letter Office; & that the patent agents named as the address for service could give no information with respect to him. The co. then gave notice of motion to rectify the Register by expunging the mark, & left a copy of this notice at the address for service & sent another copy of it in a registered packet to Chicago, accompanied by a letter. H. placed the words "Forrest, Trade Mark Registered" on his watches, & he also claimed, by his advertisements, to be entitled to various registered trade marks, among which he sometimes included the name "Forrest," sometimes "John Forrest," & sometimes "John Forrest, London." Sometimes the tree appeared in the advertisements, but more often not, & never in the form of the registered trade mark. In 1892, T., who claimed to have succeeded to F.'s business, wrote a letter of complaint, to which H.'s solrs. replied, claiming in effect an exclusive right to the name "Forrest." He did not manufacture the machines, or any other goods in the same class, but granted an exclusive licence to a manufacturing firm, who paid him royalties. They invented & patented various improvements in the machine, & after the expiration of the patent, six years from the registration of the trade mark, they continued to manufacture the improved machines & to describe them by the old name, but paid no royalties, & the registered proprietor had not, after a year & nine months from the expiration, begun to manufacture, though he had been in negotiation with manufacturers for them to do so in conjunction with him:—Held: the former licensees, against whom the registered proprietor was moving for an injunction, were "persons aggrieved" within rule 33, & the mark must be removed from the register of trade marks on the ground that, notwithstanding the negotiations, the registered proprietor was not "engaged in any business concerned in the goods within the same class as the goods with respect to which the mark was registered."—*Re RALPH'S TRADE-MARK, RALPH v. The evidence sustained claimant's allegation:—Held: the word-symbol in question had become the specific trade mark of claimant by virtue of first use, & the registration by the resps. must be cancelled. *Quot v. 450. — Person not carrying on business in England.]—R. & co. registered a trade mark for brandy in England. M. & co., who carried on business at Madras, but neither carried it on nor intended to carry it on in England, applied to rectify the register by striking out the name of R. & co. & substituting that of M. & co. as owners of the trade mark, alleging that they, M. & co., were the owners of the trade mark, & had instructed R. & co. to register it in the name of M. & co., instead of which R. & co. had registered it in their own name. The judge held that as M. & co. neither used nor intended to use the trade mark in England they were not entitled to registration of it in England, & could not be persons aggrieved within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 5, & that on this ground the application must be refused without entering on the merits:—Held: assuming M. & co. to have no right to register the trade mark in England, it did not follow as a necessary consequence that they could not be aggrieved by its being registered here in the name of another person, & the case must be dealt with on the merits.—Qu.: whether in order to entitle a person to have a trade mark registered, he must be carrying on or intending to carry on business in England.

Pltfs. at the hearing of the application, admitted the invalidity of their trade mark, but contended that defts. were not entitled to make the application, as they had entered into an agreement to act as pltf.'s sole agents in England for the sale of Scotch whisky, & to sell none under the mark in question except that of pltf.'s:—Held: defts. were entitled to make the application as "persons aggrieved," within Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90.—Re AINSLIE & Co.'s TRADE MARK (1887), 4 R. Gianacis having registered in 1885 the words "Gianacis' cigarettes" in ordinary capital letters as his trade mark, not used before Aug. 1875, for cigarettes, in 1889 he brought an action against another cigarette dealer for selling cigarettes in boxes bearing labels with the name "N. Gianulis." The prayer of the claim did not refer to the registered trade mark, but the fact of the registration was set out in detail in the body of the statement of claim. On motion by deft. for the removal of the mark from the register:—Held: (1) appet. was "a person aggrieved" by the wrongful registration, within Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, as being deft. in an action in which it was sought to make some use of the registration against him; (2) the mark should be removed from the register forthwith, without waiting for the trial of the action, since, even if fraud were then proved against deft., it would not validate the registration.—Re GIANACIS' TRADE MARK (1889), 58 L. 454. — Trade opposing registration.]—

(1) The intention of Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 5, & Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, in requiring an appet. for rectification of the Register of trade marks to be a "person aggrieved," is only to prevent the interference of common informers, or of persons actuated by merely sentimental notions, & not to require evidence of serious damage.

(2) Any person who is in the same trade as the person who has wrongfully registered a trade mark, & who desires to deal in goods covered by the wrongful registration, is prima facie a person aggrieved.

(3) Whenever one trader, by the wrongful registration of a trade mark, narrows the area of business open to his rivals, & thereby either immediately excludes, or with reasonable probability will in the future exclude, a rival from a portion of the trade into which he desires to enter, that rival is a "person aggrieved."

Although the effect produced, or likely to be produced, by the wrongful registration is not the exclusion, but only the hampering of the rival trader, the rival trader is a "person aggrieved."

(4) Whenever one trader uses the fact of his having a trade mark already on the register as any part of his case against another trader in any legal proceedings, e.g. for the purpose of supporting an application for the registration of another trade mark, which the second trader is opposing, the second trader is a "person aggrieved," & none the less because he may have other means of defending himself.—Re APOLLINARIS CO.'S TRADE MARKS, [1891] 2 Ch. 186; 61 L. In 1885 a Belgian glass manufacturing company registered in Belgium, as a trade mark for glass, the device of a red star, which they had used there since 1880. In 1890 they registered in England as a trade mark for window glass, the words "Red Star Brand." They consigned large quantities of glass to England in cases marked with a red star, but did not deal directly with the colonies. B. & Co., having discovered that glass was being sold in New Zealand under the description of "Red Star Brand," applied to expunge the Belgian co.'s mark from the Register:—Held: inasmuch as B. & Co. had the right, under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 67, to use their mark in whatever colour they deemed proper, the mere fact that the Belgian co.'s mark consisted of words instead of a device did not prevent it from being calculated to deceive; & therefore B. & Co. were "persons aggrieved" within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, & were entitled to have the mark expunged from the Register.—Re SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME DES VERRERIES DE L'ÉTOILE TRADE MARK, [1894] 2 Ch. 26; 63 L. A firm of wine merchants having registered the word "Quaker" as a Trade Mark in class 43 for fermented liquors & spirits not including whiskey, the Secretary of the Society of Friends applied by motion to rectify the Register by the removal of the trade mark on the grounds that it was not entitled to protection in the Ct. or Registry, & was scandalous & liable to deceive, or had reference to the character or quality of the goods. There is no rule of total abstinence in the Society of Friends:—Held: no damage in a legal sense could accrue to the Society of Friends, or that portion of its members who were total abstainers, from the use of the Trade Mark, & they were not persons aggrieved.—Re ELLIS & CO'S TRADE MARK (1901), 21 R. "The B. co." were in the habit of supplying these cameras to "the C. co." an English co., who claimed to be, but were not in fact, sole agents in this country. In June, 1895, "the C. co." registered that trade mark in this country, & in Aug. 1895 the business of "the B. co." was sold by A. to D. On a motion by D. to rectify the Register by expunging the trade mark registered by "the C. co." Held: as such registration appeared to have been effected without sufficient cause, D. was a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act 1883 (c. 57), s. 90, & rectification was ordered accordingly. Re EUROPEAN BLAIR CAMERA CO.'S TRADE MARK (1896), 75 L. 466. — — — — —.] G. was the manufacturer of a patent "Cyclo-style" copying apparatus from 1882 onwards, and in 1888 invented improvements for his apparatus, which he then called "Neo-Cyclostyle." "Cyclostyle" was registered as a trade mark, but not "Neo-Cyclostyle." In 1884 he employed K. as his sole sub-licencee, & agent under an agreement for the sale of the goods in America. From Jan. 1889 G. made in England & exported to K. in America as his sole consignee similar goods marked "Neostyle." The word "Neostyle" had been invented by K. in 1887, but was only used by him in America on the goods ordered from G., who never sold the goods so marked in England. In 1900, K. to the knowledge of G. formed the Neostyle Manufacturing co., Ltd. in England for the sale of "Neostyle" goods, & in Oct. 1901 registered the word "Neostyle" as a trade mark:—Held: G. was a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 90; as between G. & K. under the agreement of 1884 any names or designations in the nature of trade marks, applied to goods manufactured by G. for sale in America, would be acquired in the right of G. & not of K.;

Sect. 5.—Correction of register and alteration of trade marks: Sub-sect. 1, B. (b), C. (a).]

K. had himself acquired no exclusive right such as would entitle him to register "Neostyle" as a trade mark; & the sole right of the English co., resps., was that derived from the user of the word since 1900, which had probably deprived G. of any right to bring an action to restrain them from continuing that user, but could not possibly confer on the English co. an exclusive right to use the word "Neostyle" or to interfere with the business of G. The mark was accordingly ordered to be expunged from the Register.—Re NEOSTYLE MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.'S TRADE MARK (1903), 20 R. P. C. 803.

It was contended that appts. were not persons aggrieved & by the new co. that they ought not in view of a letter, they had written, to have been made resps., & they asked for their costs:—Held: appts. were persons aggrieved, & whether or not, they had in fact any rights in the mark, it ought to be removed from the Register.—Re "ZONOPHONE" REGISTERED TRADE MARK (1903), 20 R. The mark consisted of a device of a lighthouse, with words, including "Petroleum oil for burning" & "Safety Guaranteed." A firm acquired the mark in 1894, & in 1927 commenced an action for infringement & passing off against a firm that had erected at their filling stations for automobiles pumps constructed in the form of a lighthouse & used for the supply of petrol & other spirits of various brands & makers. Pltfs. carried on business, exclusively wholesale, as petroleum refiners & distillers of benzol, petrol & naphtha, & they contended that the use by defts. of the device of a lighthouse was understood by the trade & the public as indicating that the goods sold under it were pltf.'s goods. Pltfs. had been informed by the Registrar that petrol was included in class 47. Defts. moved to rectify the register by expunging the entry of the mark, or by limiting the specification of goods for which the mark was registered so as to exclude petrol:—Held: (1) up to Dec. 1926, the public did not know anything about "Lighthouse," either name or symbol, in connection with petrol; (2) a trade mark does not give a monopoly in the form of the article represented in the mark, but that the form may be so used as to indicate origin, & thereby constitute infringement; (3) defts.' pumps had not been used as an indication of origin of the contents & the user of them did not constitute an infringement; there had not been passing off; (4) petrol was to be regarded as a spirit, not as an oil, & if the mark covered petrol, it ought to be limited, & the specification of goods ought to be amended by the addition of words indicating that the mark did not cover petrol, but that the registrar should be heard, if he thought fit; (5) the action was dismissed with costs, defts. were given the costs of the motion, & pltfs. were ordered to pay the costs of the registrar.—*CARLESS, CAPEL & LEONARD v. tion, by reason of default on the part of appct., the application shall be deemed to be abandoned"; & sect. 113 provides that the repeal of previous enactments therein contained shall not affect any application pending:—Held: the effect of sects. 63 & 113 read together was that such pending applications for registration as were not completed by registration within the period of twelve months prescribed by sect. 63 came within the operation of the last-mentioned sect., the Registrar of Trade Marks was therefore bound to treat the application as abandoned, & the mark was improperly registered.

(2) The ct., however, in exercise of the discretion given by sect. 90 of the Act, instead of directing the mark to be expunged, ordered that the register should be rectified by inserting an entry directing that the five years mentioned in sect. 76 should begin to run from the date of such entry.

(3) Where a trade mark, not otherwise objectionable, contained words which were admitted to be common in the trade, the ct. directed the register to be rectified by entering thereon a disclaimer of the intention to claim any right of exclusive use of such words.

(4) Where a trade mark contained the words "sole makers" immediately preceding words descriptive of an article, & it was admitted that the persons registering the mark were not the sole makers of that article, the ct. ordered the mark to be expunged from the register as being calculated to deceive.

(5) Where it appeared that the customers of a firm of H. & co. had for many years been accustomed to ask for a certain article by the name of "Coker Canvas," but it did not appear that the words "H.'s Coker Canvas" had been stamped upon any of the goods of the firm or advertised as a trade mark:—Held: there had been no use by the firm of the words "H.'s Coker Canvas" as a trade mark.—Re HAYWARD'S TRADE MARKS (1885), 54 L. 479. Determination of good will.—Plffs. in 1893 granted a sole licence to manufacture closets under a patent to S., who afterwards transferred his business to a limited co. The licence terminated in 1898. In the five years S. & his successors manufactured closets under the licence, some of which were sold by plffs. & some by S. & his successors. The former were sold as "Turritt" & the latter as "Capstan." The word "Capstan," with the device of a capstan, was registered as a trade mark by S. by arrangement with plffs. The registration was for the whole of class 16, but the trade mark was only used on closets made under the licence until a few months after the determination of the licence, when the co. began to sell closets of a slightly different pattern as "Capstan No. 2." Plffs. thereupon brought an action to restrain the co. from selling any closets of their manufacture under the title of "Capstan," & from in any other manner passing off their goods as goods constructed under the licence of plffs. Plffs. moved for an interlocutory injunction, & also moved to expunge the trade mark from the Register on the ground that "Capstan" was the name of a patented article, & on the ground that the co. were no longer able to manufacture "Capstan" closets, & therefore their goodwill in such closets having determined the trade mark had determined also:—Held: both motions failed & must be refused.—*FREEMAN BROTHERS v. The said trade mark having come to the notice of W. J. C. he adopted it as his, knowing the mark to be so registered & used as aforesaid, & registered the same in Canada as his own mark. The application by him failed to disclose the existence of plffs' mark, & declared that he was the first & only user thereof. Hence the present action to expunge:—Held: defts. was not the "proprietor" of the said trade mark within Trade Mark & Designs Act, & the trade mark was improperly registered, was calculated to mislead & deceive the public & should be expunged.—*WILLIAMSON CANDY CO. v. 480. Prior user by other firm—Mark not attached to goods.]—Upon an application to remove resp.'s trade mark from the register & to register appet.'s trade mark, it appeared that in 1875 appetts., who were brewers & wine & spirit merchants, adopted a badger as their trade mark, & used it in connection with their goods in that business. In 1882 they commenced the manufacture of aerated waters, & included them in their price lists, on the back of which they placed the picture of a badger, with the words "trade mark." From 1892 they headed their letter paper with the mark, describing themselves as wine & spirit merchants & aerated water manufacturers. They never used the mark in connection with aerated waters except as above mentioned, nor had they registered the mark for any class of goods. In 1887 resp., not knowing of appet.'s trade mark or business, adopted a badger, similar to appet.'s mark, as a trade mark in connection with his aerated water business, & in 1888 he registered the mark, & had since then used it on his bottles. Neither of the marks was an "old mark."—Held: that, as appet.'s mark had not been used upon the goods or upon any wrapper or case containing the goods, the registration of resp.'s mark in 1888 was valid & could not be removed from the register, & appet.'s mark could not be registered.—Re VERITY'S TRADE MARK, Re HALL & WOODHOUSE'S TRADE MARK (1901), 18 T. 481. Registration merely to prevent competition.]—The proprietors of a registered trade mark consisting of the word "Talisman" used on rubber heels, commenced an action for infringement of the trade mark, & defts. moved to rectify the Register by the removal of the mark. On the hearing of the motion it was proved that resps. had had rubber heels manufactured for them for the purposes of executing orders given by a firm in a foreign country. The heels had upon them the word "Talisman" & the initials of the name of the foreign firm. At that time the word was the trade mark in the foreign country of S., trading as the foreign firm for rubber goods in the foreign country. Subsequently the manufacturers who had made the heels for resps. executed an order for rubber heels given to them directly by S. & marked the heels with the trade mark & initials. Resps. then registered the trade mark in this country. After the registration, appetts. executed an order from S. for rubber heels bearing the trade mark & initials:—Held: resps. had merely been the agents for the foreign firm to stamp the goods which they were having made for the firm with the trade mark of the firm & its initials: there had been a limited user of the mark in this country sufficient to disentitle resps. to register it; the intention of resps. in registering the mark had been to prevent any one in this country from competing with them for business with the foreign firm; & they were not entitled to do that. The trade mark was ordered to be removed from the Register.—Re NEW ATLAS RUBBER CO., LTD.'S TRADE MARK (1918), 35 R. P. C. 269.

497. —[J.—]Amounting to abandonment.]—In order to deprive a manufacturer of his right to a trade mark, the use of which has been practically given up for a period of five years, mere discontinuance of user for lack of demand, though coupled with non-registration, & non-assertion of any right, is not enough, there must be evidence of distinct intention to abandon. In 1874, A., a German soap manufacturer, adopted a trade mark for a particular kind of soap, which for about two years was manufactured & sent to this country in large quantities for exportation to Australia, but from 1876 until 1882 the manufacture & sale of soap thus marked fell off, until it practically ceased, & the existence of the particular mark was in May, 1882, forgotten by A. In 1880, B., a manufacturer of soap in the same part of Germany, adopted, in complete ignorance of A.'s mark, a precisely similar mark for soap sent to this country for exportation to Australia, & in Aug. 1880, he registered his mark under the Trade Marks Acts in this country. In July, 1882, after the commencement of proceedings by B. to restrain an infringement of his registered trade mark by A., A. applied for registration of his mark of 1874. Upon applications (a) by B. to restrain the infringement of his trade mark; (b) by A. to have his trade mark registered; (c) by A. to have B.'s trade mark removed from the Register:—Held: (1) mere non-user by A. of his mark between 1876 & 1882, although coupled with non-registration, did not, having regard to the fact that he had not ceased to carry on his business, & had not broken up the mould, & a number indicating soap thus marked was retained on his price lists, amount to an abandonment by A. of the mark, so as to give B. any exclusive right to his registered mark; (2) the existence upon the register of B.'s mark did not prevent the ct. from granting leave for the registration of A.'s mark; (3) previous bona fide registration of B.'s mark in ignorance of any claim by A., followed by large dealings under that mark, prevented A., after the lapse of two years, from getting B.'s mark expunged from the register.—*MOUSON & Co. v. There had been a small sale of "Aladdin" soap prior to 1904, but there was no evidence of any use of the "Aladdin" mark by the T. co. after that date. An application was made to remove the trade mark from the register on the ground of non-user & abandonment. Resps. had not used the trade mark. Evidence was given by resps. to show that the non-user of the "Aladdin" mark had not been due to any intention to abandon it, that it would have been necessary to obtain new dies to make "Aladdin" soap, that owing to the war it had not been possible to obtain such dies, that owing to the war resps.' business had been restricted generally, & that they intended as soon as conditions should become normal to continue the manufacture & sale of soap under the name "Aladdin":—Held: there had been no bona fide use of the mark during the five years immediately preceding the application, such non-user had not been due to special circumstances in the trade, & the case came within Sect. 37 of the Trade Marks Acts, 1905-1919. Semble: the mark had been abandoned at common law.

In order that the saving provision in sect. 37 should apply non-user must be due to special circumstances in the trade, & not merely in the particular business, & must not be due to some other cause which would have operated whether the special circumstances had arisen or not.—*Re CREAN (JAMES) & SON, LTD.'S TRADE MARK (1921), 38 R. Another co. obtained an injunction restraining the limited co. from selling meat extract or meat juice under the name of "Valtine" & subsequently moved to remove the marks from the Register of trade marks, the grounds of the application being that at the date of the assignment V. had no goodwill to assign, that the marks were deceptive, & had not been used except for meat extract. 505. ————.]—In 1878 a co. registered a trade mark, consisting of a figure of a milkmaid with the words "Milkmaid Brand," in class 42, for substances used as food or ingredients in food, with the exception of certain goods, not including butter in such exceptions. In 1901 the same co. registered another trade mark consisting of a slightly different figure of a milkmaid with the same words for the whole of class 42. The co. had also other trade marks with the figure of a milkmaid in them, but not for butter. Their principal trade was in condensed milk & they never traded in butter in the United Kingdom until May, 1901, although they had formed the intention of so trading in 1897, & had traded abroad in butter. In 1902 they commenced an action against another co. for infringement of, in particular, the trade marks of 1878 & 1901, & for passing-off, & in it complained of the use by defts. of coloured posters & handbills having thereon the figure of a milkmaid with deft.'s trade name prominently thereon & the words "Milk Blended Butter"; these posters & handbills were first used in Nov. 1901. Pltfs. alleged they had a reputation in various articles of dairy produce under the brand of a milkmaid, & that the posters were calculated to lead persons to believe that the butter to which they referred was pltfs.' butter. Pltfs. had only a small retail trade in butter, & used only the 1901 trade mark, & not that of 1878, in connection with such trade. Defts. had a very large retail trade in their milk blended butter. They denied infringement & passing-off, & moved to exclude butter from the goods for which the trade marks were registered on the grounds that pltfs. had never used or intended to use the 1878 trade mark for butter, & that in 1901 a milkmaid was common to the trade. The action & motion were heard together:—Held: the action failed as to passing-off & the Register must be rectified so as to exclude butter from the class of goods for which the trade marks were registered on the ground, as to the 1878 trade mark, there had been no real intention to use it for butter.—*Re ANGLO-SWISS CONDENSED MILK CO.'S TRADE MARKS, ANGLO-SWISS CONDENSED MILK CO. v. On applying to register in class 42 they were informed that P. & co., Ltd., were registered for a similar mark & label for all goods in class 42 except peas & beans. P. & co., Ltd., did not deal in toffee or sweetmeats generally, but they sold a malt extract of a saccharine nature which could by compression or evaporation be reduced to a substance resembling toffee. It was not alleged that their malt extract had been sold in this form. It was, however, largely sold to confectioners & sweetmeat makers for use in their preparations. J. M., Ltd. applied by motion to rectify the register by excluding toffee & sweetmeats from the goods in respect of which P. & co.'s marks were registered. Various offers had been made by P. & co. as to the limitation of their registration before these proceedings were begun & at the hearing, none of which would apparently have enabled appts. to get upon the register for their goods, but finally they expressed their willingness to submit to an order excluding toffee & confectionery:—Held: resps.' registrations must be limited so as to exclude toffee & confectionery; & resps. were ordered to pay the costs of the motion for rectification.—Re PAINE & CO., LTD.'S REGISTERED TRADE MARKS (1908), 25 R. 509. ————.]—An application was made to the Comptroller, as registrar of trade marks, for rectification of or removal from the register of a trade mark, consisting of the word "Komoline," in class 48, in respect of a toilet preparation for the hair. The application was opposed by the owner of the trade mark, who had obtained an assignment in Aug. 1925, of the mark, & of the goodwill of the business concerned in the goods for which it had been registered. Appt. had a trade in hair dyes in France & other countries including the United Kingdom & sold his products under the name of "Komol," & had been refused registration of the word "Komol" by the Assistant-Comptroller, for which he had applied on Apr. 4, 1925. Appt. alleged that there had been no bonâ fide user of the trade mark during the five years immediately preceding the application, that the presence of the trade mark in the register was illegal, that it had become, by assignment, dissociated from the goodwill of the business, & that the opponent had acquired it, not bonâ fide, but for the purpose of directly or indirectly preventing appt. from registering his trade mark "Komol" in respect of hair dyes. The application for rectification was refused & appt. appealed to the ct.:—Held: the mark was a manufacturer's mark & there had been no severance of one part of the goodwill from the other part of the goodwill but the whole passed by the assignment to resp., & there had been no abandonment & nothing had taken place to destroy the mark; & the conclusion of the Assistant-Comptroller was correct, & it ought to be affirmed, but the order of the ct. was not to prejudice any application which appt. might be advised to make hereafter for the purpose of limiting the scope of the trade mark. The application was dismissed, appt. being ordered to pay costs, including the costs of the Comptroller-General.—Re SMITH'S TRADE MARK (1927) 44 R. P. C. 533.

The material had been sold by plffs.' predecessors under the name since 1854. Plffs., Benjamin Edgington, Ltd., bought the trade mark, & brought this action in 1889 to restrain defts. from infringing. Defts. moved to expunge the trade mark on the grounds (a) that at the time when the registration was made the registered words had become the ordinary name of the material; & (b) that they had not been used as a trade mark at any time:—Held: the burden of proof was upon defts. to prove the use of the words as the name of the article before the years 1875 & 1878, & also that the words were not used as a trade mark before 1875; this they had failed to do; motion, therefore, to rectify register refused, & perpetual injunction granted to restrain defts. from using the words "Frige Domo," as a trade mark for any baize or other material intended to be used for horticultural or similar purposes & not manufactured by or for the plaintiffs, or selected by them. On discovering the registration of the word by S., proceedings were commenced by P. & Sons for rectification of the register by removing S.'s mark. On the hearing of the motion it was contended by P. & Sons that the goods in respect of which the two marks were used were of the same description, & evidence was given to show that they were dealt in by the same people & sold at the same counter. The owners of the trade mark agreed out of ct. to an order to that effect, & did not at first appear on the motion, but on behalf of the Registrar an order for removal was asked for, & was made provisionally, notice to be given to the owners. Thereupon the owners appeared & filed evidence of long use on sugar, & it was agreed that an order should be taken limiting the registration to sugar. Appets. had registered various labels under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), the labels containing the words "Trade mark" in such a manner as to refer to a particular part of the mark as being the essential part, as, for instance, in one label the words being used in close proximity to a bull's head:—Held: the alteration could only be allowed as a matter of grace, & upon such terms as the ct. thought right, as the law stood under the Act of 1888.—Re COLMAN'S TRADE MARKS, [1891] 2 Ch. 402; 60 L. The Registrar refused the application holding that as the appearance of the word "Royal" on a trade mark was absolutely prohibited by rule 12 of the Trade Mark Rules he could not allow an old mark to be so altered:—Held: (1) the proposed addition was not part of the correct legal designation of the co. & therefore was not entitled to registration as such under Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 9; (2) the present application must be treated as relating to a new mark & under rule 12 of the Trade Mark Rules the Registrar had rightly refused to allow the registration of the word "Royal."—Re CAIRN CO.'S APPLICATION (1910), 26 T. 560. ——The inventor of a sauce gave it the name of the Licensed Victuallers' Relish, & designed a trade mark for labels on the bottles containing it, & employed his son to sell it. He permitted his son to describe himself in his circulars & invoices as the sole proprietor of the sauce. The son became bkpt. & his trustee sold his interest in the sauce & its trade mark to pltf.'s who now sought to restrain the inventor from infringing the trade mark. It appeared that pltf.'s did not know deft.'s recipe, but made a sauce which their witnesses deposed to be indistinguishable from deft.'s:—Held: a trade mark could not exist in gross, & as the pltf.'s did not know the recipe for the original article, they could not have a right to affix the trade mark to a sham article for the purposes of imposing on the public.—*COTTON v. 561. ——The owners of a trade mark for cigars, consisting of the Spanish words "El Destino" on a label with various devices, in Oct. 1890, commenced an action for infringement & for passing off other goods as pltf.'s against B., who sold cigars under a similar label, bearing the words "El Destinacion." Pltf.'s title was as follows: G., a Mexican cigar manufacturer, first sold cigars as "El Destino" about 1875. His manufactory was also called "El Destino." In 1889, G. sold the brand to R., retaining his manufacturing business, but he was not to sell under that brand. R. sold half the rights acquired by him to pltf.'s, who had acted as agents for G., & had sold his "El Destino" cigars in England. It was stipulated that any registration should be in the joint names of R. & pltf.'s. Pltf.'s who trading as G. & Co., in March, 1890, registered the label in the name of G. & Co., specifying as essential particulars the words "El Destino" the fac simile signature & the combination of devices. Defts. denied infringement & passing off. They contended that pltf.'s registration was bad, & they counterclaimed for rectification of the Register by expunging pltf.'s trade mark. Defts. adduced evidence to show that S. registered "El Destino" in 1881, & sold the mark to his son S. & W., who carried on business till 1886; that W. then carried it on alone some time longer; that in Mar. 1890, he consented alone to the mark being expunged, though by the terms of his dissolution with S. the mark was to be sold. Defts. submitted on this (a) that the mark "El Destino" was publici juris; (b) that the registration by pltf.'s was not in the proper name; (c) that S.'s registration was improperly expunged, no notice having been given to S. the son; (d) that pltf.'s essential particulars had not been taken; (e) that "El Destino" was not capable of registration as it described the character of the goods in that they were Spanish, & was geographical as it was the name of the factory. The jury found that pltf.'s trade mark

He registered in 1894, under Trade Marks Act 1888 (c. 50), a trade mark in which his trade name was a prominent feature, the essential particular of the mark being the written signature & the exclusive use of added matter, except as consisting in the name being disclaimed. In 1908, J. was, under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 116, appointed, & continued under divers orders, receiver of the estate of P. The business including the goodwill was offered for sale in 1909, but was not then sold. P.'s family having objected to the sale of the goodwill, the business was closed, the plant, trade effects, & lease being sold in Apr. 1910. A circular was sent out stating that the business was being discontinued & the account books were burnt. Defts. sold marmalade which they stated was prepared by the manager of the late firm of Sidney Ord & Co. & under labels in which that name was very prominent. The action to restrain passing off by defts. & their motion to rectify the register of trade marks by removing P.'s trade mark coming on for hearing together:—Held: assuming pl'tf.'s right in the label & trade mark were subsisting, defts. would have infringed pl'tf.'s rights; pl'tf. having ceased manufacturing marmalade for three years, no right of property existed in him which enabled him to restrain defts. from passing off marmalade under labels or marks containing his assumed trade name. The right to use the trade mark came to an end when pl'tf.'s business was discontinued, & it was not competent even if desired to keep the goodwill alive. The trade mark as a derelict trade mark not attached to the goods of the trader who registered it & without any goodwill to support it was a danger to the trading community which any trader who desired to adopt the name was as "an aggrieved person" under sects. 22 & 35 of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), entitled to have removed from the register.—*PINK v. period of 25 years to distinguish packages of dried fish shipped by them to the Brazil market, although such trade mark was not specifically mentioned in the assignment.—ROBIN v. HART (1891), 23 N. S. R. (11 R. & G.) 316: CAN.

American Leather Cloth Co.*, No. 570, post, & recognised by Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), s. 2, & Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 70, namely, that a trade mark can be validly assigned only with the goodwill of the business concerned in the goods for which it has been registered.

F., the proprietor of an English registered trade mark in the form of a label under which he had for many years manufactured a pharmaceutical preparation in France & imported it into England, assigned the English trade mark to pl'tfs. by deed containing the words "together with the goodwill of the business concerned in the goods"; but F. continued as before to manufacture the preparation in France under the same label. Pl'tfs. sought to restrain deft., who had purchased the pharmaceutical preparation from F. under the said label, from importing it into England in alleged infringement of pl'tfs.' registered trade mark. Deft. applied by motion to rectify the register by expunging pl'tfs.' registration:—Held: according to the intention of the parties evidenced by the facts, the goodwill of the whole of F.'s business was not assigned: but, even if it were, pl'tfs. must be treated as having abandoned the part of the business carried on in France. Therefore the mark not having been assigned in connection with the goodwill of F.'s manufacturing & vending business in France, as required by Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 22, & having become deceptive owing to pl'tfs.' own conduct, the action failed & the mark must be expunged from the Register of Trade Marks.—*LACTEOSOTE, LTD. v. Stamp duty on agreement.—By an agreement made in England appts., a limited co., bought from a firm of soap manufacturers in the United States their freehold works, book & other debts, together with the goodwill of the business & the trade marks used in connection therewith. The vendors were the owners of a trade mark, registered in England, relating to their soap, which trade mark was extensively circulated throughout England in newspapers & pictorial advertisements at the expense of the vendors, who had an office in London for that purpose, & by this means a large demand for the soap had been created in the United Kingdom. The vendors did not sell direct to the retail dealers in the United Kingdom, but to a syndicate of three firms, who gave orders for soap which was despatched to them in England & paid for by them by remittances sent to the vendors; the syndicate then resold it to retail dealers & others at such prices as they thought fit; about two-thirds of the total sales of the vendors were made to the English syndicate:—Held: the English trade mark & goodwill were "property" within the meaning of Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 59 (1), & the agreement was liable in respect of them to ad valorem stamp duty.—*BROOKE & Co. v. B. How Effected.

570. On sale of business.—(1) A co. purchased all the property, utensils, goodwill of business, & trade marks, etc., of a manufacturer: this purchase would authorise the co., really carrying on business at the same place, to continue the use of the manufacturer's name & marks, so as to be protected therein against infringement of the same.

(2) There may be a property in a trade mark which, on the sale of the right to manufacture the goods which it designates, may also be sold & transferred. Semble: a paper descriptive of a trade does not constitute a "trade mark."

I think that the right to a trade mark may, in general, treating it as a property or as an accessory of property, be sold & transferred upon a sale & transfer of the manufactory of the goods on which the mark has been used to be affixed, & may be lawfully used by the purchaser. Difficulties, however, may arise where the trade mark consists merely of the name of the manufactures. When he dies, those who succeed him (grandchildren or married daughters, for instance) though they may not bear the same name, yet ordinarily continue to use the original name as a trade mark, & they would be protected against any infringement of the exclusive right to that mark. They would be so protected because according to the usages of trade, they would be understood as meaning no more by the use of their grandfather's or father's name, than that they were carrying on the manufacture formerly carried on by him (LORD CRANWORTH).

(3) Where an advertisement, or trade mark, states that which is not true, it cannot be made the subject of protection by the Ct. of Ch.

(4) Persons of the name of Crockett manufactured leather cloth, & put on it a stamp, describing it as manufactured by them at "New Jersey, U.S., & West Ham, Essex," & as being patented & being tanned. Appls. bought their manufactured articles, their materials for manufacture, goodwill, & premises at West Ham, & their trade marks. Semble: on such a purchase the continued use by the purchaser of Crockett's original bill was not a fraud on their part, & if the use of it had been infringing, it might have been protected.

But where in a stamp used by depts., the form of the printed words, the words themselves, & the pictured symbol introduced among them, so much differed from that of plfts., that any person with reasonable care & observation must see the difference, & could not be misled into taking the one for the other:—Held: there had been no infringement.—*LEATHER CLOTH CO. v. Therefore on sale of business by a trader's assignees in bkpcy. the trader has no right, upon setting up a fresh business after his discharge, to use the trade marks of his old business, or in any other way to represent himself as carrying on the identical business which was sold, although he has a right to set up again in business of the same kind next door to his old place of business. 574. — By custodian of alien property abroad —Trade mark registered in this country.—No independent agency in this country.]—A firm, M. & co., consisting of Germans, carried on, before the war, the business of manufacturers & merchants of champagne, at R. in France, & were the proprietors of four trade marks registered in England for champagne. The business in France was lawfully sequestrated & sold to a French co. by the liquidator in France, & purchasers applied as successors of M. & co. to be registered as proprietors of the trade marks. The members of the old firm of M. & co. applied that the address in the register should be altered to an address of theirs in Switzerland, & alleged that the English goodwill & trade marks had not passed to the French co.; & they alleged that there was a secret in the manufacture by them of champagne. The question also arose whether a decision of the Franco-German mixed tribunal under the Peace Treaty determined the rights as between the purchasers & M. & co. as regards the English trade marks, & if so, whether that decision was binding in the present application:—Held: the marks were manufacturer's marks, & meant champagne wine manufactured & supplied by M. & co. at R.; that the business had always been carried on at R. & there was no independent agency or sale branch in this country, & the goodwill, clientèle & custom, so far as they related to the export trade, were indissolubly connected with the French business; the French co. were unquestionably now the proprietors of the French business; under these circumstances it followed that the marks must pass to the purchasers of the French business; there was no secret process in possession only of the M. family, & the trade marks would not be deceptive if used by purchasers; & apart from the decision of the mixed tribunal, the French co. had proved their right to be registered as subsequent proprietors of the trade marks; the tribunal could properly decide that, according to the law of France, the foreign trade marks passed to the French co., but it could not decide whether the registration of that co. as proprietors in England was premissible or whether it would be deceptive according to the law of England; in any case their decision, if not conclusive, ought to be approached with every possible respect & it was favourable to the claims of the French co.

The application of the French co. was allowed on the condition imposed by the mixed tribunal, that words stating the French co. to be the successors of M. & co. in a prescribed form should appear on all labels used on wines manufactured by the French co. after the sale of the business to them. The application of M. & co. to remain proprietors with their altered address in Switzerland was refused.—Re MUMM (G. H.) & Co.'s APPLICATIONS (1922), 39 R. P. C. 379.

575. — Effect limited to property within jurisdiction of custodian.]—In an action, brought at Shanghai, for infringement of trade marks & passing off, pltf. was German by birth, but in 1886 had become naturalised as a Belgian subject. For many years he had carried on a business at Manila as a manufacturer of cigars that were sold under certain registered names & trade marks & in boxes with a facsimile of pltf.'s signature, & words of guarantee. Later, pltf. had established a factory at Hongkong. In 1918, the American custodian of alien property had sold the Manila business, with the goodwill & marks. The assignees of the business sold to defts. cigars in boxes similar to those in which pltf. had sold them, but with the addition of the assignees' name & the word "Successors," & defts. had sold the cigars at Shanghai. At the trial, pltf. contended that the assignment by the American custodian did not affect rights outside the Philippine Islands, that its recognition by a British ct. would be to give effect to penal legislation of the United States; & that the sale of cigars under the names & marks in question would lead the public in China to think that they were purchasing pltf.'s goods. It was held that on all of the three contentions of pltf. the action failed, & judgment was given for defts., with costs. Pltf. appealed to the Privy Council; & at the hearing of the appeal defts. gave an undertaking not to use a particular label, or any other label upon which the name of pltf. should appear as the guarantor of the cigars or otherwise:—Held: the assignment of pltf.'s business could not transfer the title to trade marks or trade names in China, but could enable the assignees, as between themselves & pltf., to say that they were not passing off goods to which they had no title, so long as they abstained from representing the goods as those of pltf.; defts. having given the undertaking as to the labels, the appeal must be dismissed.—INGENHOHL v. WING ON & Co. (SHANGHAI), LTD. (1927), 44 R. P. C. 343, P. C.

576. Employee learning trade secret—Practising secret after employer's death—Selling article under old name.]—(1) When a man has learnt a trade secret from his employer, & practised it after the employer's death, selling the article under the old name, he will not acquire such a right to the exclusive use of the name as a trade mark as will be protected in a ct. of equity.

(2) Semble: where a trader acquiesces in a particular infringement of his trade mark for a considerable period during his life, his representatives will be unable to restrain it after his death.—HOVENDEN v. LLOYD (1870), 18 W. R. 1132.

a mark which was not originally theirs, but belonged to a Bank that had ceased to exist, & where there was no proof of any transfer or assignment of the mark, or that the new Bank succeeded the other in the sense either that it was a continuation of that Bank under another name, or that it succeeded to the business or acquired the goodwill of that Bank:—Held: not to be sufficient to establish that the mark was the trade mark of the new Bank.—ANOOKOOL CHUNDER NUNDY v. R. (1900), 1 L. R. 27 Calc. 776.—IND.

q. Court may look at surrounding circumstances.]—In order that a trade

578. Mark granted by Cutlers' Company.]—(1) Upon the formation of a partnership with a person entitled to a trade mark, such mark will, in the absence of express provisions in relation to it, become an asset of the partnership, for the whole trade is carried into the partnership, & the trade mark is but one element in it. Such a trade mark is, therefore, capable of being assigned by the partnership & the ct. will after an assignment to a purchaser restrain the firm, or any partner in it, from himself using the mark & from assigning it to any other person. Trade marks granted by the Cutlers' Company of Sheffield to persons not free of the Company, are, under the various Acts of Parliament regulating the Company, to be regarded as property capable of assignment by the grantee, & the principles enunciated above apply therefore to them also.

(2) If a personal trade mark be in any respect less assignable than one referring to locality only or a mere device, the distinction must be limited to cases where the mark is so clearly personal as to import that the goods bearing it are manufactured by a particular person.—*BURY v. 580. Mark registered by sole selling agents—For benefit of foreign manufacturers—Assignment to manufacturers.]—M. & R., carrying on business as co-partners in New York, instructed their agents in this country, B. & W., to register two trade marks for goods of theirs, of which B. & W. had the exclusive sale. Such trade marks were registered by B. & W. as to one in the name of their firm, & as to the other in the name of W. only. B. & W., having no beneficial ownership in the trade marks, in Aug. 1884, assigned them to M. & R. In Dec. 1884, one of the partners in the firm of M. & R. retired, & by a deed assigned all his interest in the business of the firm & in the trade marks to the continuing partners. In Dec. 1885, another partner retired, & three new partners joined the firm, but no assignment was executed by the retiring partner. On a motion by the present partners in the firm of M. & R., & the last retiring partner, under Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 78, that proper notices of the assignments of Aug. 1881, & Dec. 1884, might be entered on the Register, & the persons entitled under the last-mentioned assignment might be entered as the present proprietors of the trade marks:—Held: the application might be granted, as the trade marks had been transmitted in connection with the goodwill of the business of M. & R. within the meaning of Patents, Designs, & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 70.—Re WELLCOME'S TRADE MARK, Re BURROUGHS, WELLCOME & CO.'S TRADE MARK (1886), 32 Ch. 581. Goodwill assigned after trade mark—To same person.]—C., who carried on business as the London Pickle Co., was the registered owner of a mark, containing various devices, including a blank shield & the words the London Pickle Co. C. used the mark with the addition of an arm holding a dart on the shield & the words trade mark across the bottom of the shield. In Apr. 1891, C. became bkpt., & the trustee in his bkpcy. sold the mark to H. in July. H. sent a cheque to the trustee in purchase of the registered brand "The London Pickle Co." & all rights thereto. The trustee gave a receipt for the money, & in it he said he thereby transferred to H. the registered mark. H. then proceeded to use the mark as C. had done. In Dec. 1891, H. obtained from the trustee a formal deed of assignment of the mark, & of the goodwill of the part of C.'s business relating to the class of goods for which the mark was registered. In Jan. 1892, H. commenced an action against M. & Co., & C., who had become manager of part of M.'s business, for infringement of the mark & for passing off their goods as H.'s. Defts. used a very similar label in similar colours, bearing the words London Pickles, & in a shield the letters L.P. & also the words trade mark. Defts. contended that (a) the original assignment to H. was void as being an assignment in gross; (b) that both then, & at the date of the formal assignment, there was no goodwill existing to assign, & that therefore the assignment to pltf. was bad; (c) that pltf. did not use his mark as registered; (d) that the words trade mark in it were misleading; (e) that there was no infringement or passing off:—Held: (1) assuming the first assignment was not in proper form, it was cured by the formal assignment, & the trustee showed his intention of passing & had power to pass the goodwill, though it might be it was of little value, & the assignment was therefore valid; (2) mere additions to a trade mark did not disentitle a person who used the whole of it to an injunction.—HAMMOND & CO. v. MALCOLM, BRUNKER & CO. & COLLYNS (1892), 8 T. L. R. 324; 9 R. P. O. 301.

583. Assignment of reversionary interest in goodwill.]—(1) In order that the name of an article may be the trade mark of the manufacturer it must indicate not the article only, but also that the article is manufactured by the person claiming the name as a trade mark as distinguished from other persons. The name "Magnolia" being applied to a certain metal, by whomever manufactured, cannot be registered as a trade mark or as the essential part of one.

PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 1.—C.

r. General rule.]—For the assignment of a trade mark to be operative in law, it is not sufficient that an assignment of goodwill should accompany or follow the transfer of the trade mark, so as literally to comply with the rule that a trade mark cannot be transferred in gross, but the trade mark must continue to be a representation of the truth as warranting

the origin of the goods to which it is attached, within the limits of deviation sanctioned by the usage of trade & commerce.—BRITISH AMERICAN TOBACCO CO., LTD. v. MAHBOOB BUKSH (1910), 1 L. R. 38 Calc. 110.—IND.

t. Necessity for registration.]—Although Trade Mark & Design Act, 1879, s. 4, requires registration of the trade mark before the proprietor can bring an action, & sect. 14 provides

(2) The words "Magnolia Anti-Friction Metal," as applied to bearings in machinery, have reference to the character & quality of the goods within Trade Marks Act, 1888 (c. 50), s. 10 (1) (e), "Magnolia" being the name applied to a well-known metal; but the word "Magnolia" alone, as applied to a metal, has not, although it had, prior to the registration of the word as a trade mark, become known as the name of the metal.

(3) A word does not become a "geographical name" within Trade Marks Act, 1888 (c. 50), s. 10 (1) (e), simply because some place on the earth has been called by it, its primary signification not being geographical, & it not being the name of the place where the article named after it is manufactured.

(4) An American co. manufactured a metal, the main use of which was in bearings for machinery. They had not sold any bearings in this country, but had by means of an English partnership trading under their authority procured bearings to be made, & had a commercial interest in their being made, & they had a reversionary right in the goodwill of the business so carried on:—Held: the American co. had a business concerned with the metal bearings, in connection with the goodwill of which a trade mark registered for bearings made of the metal in question could be assigned under Patents, Designs & Trade Marks Act, 1883 (c. 57), s. 70.—Re MAGNOLIA METAL CO.'S TRADE MARKS, [1897] 2 Ch. 371; 76 L. SECT. 7.—INFRINGEMENT OF TRADE MARKS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

592. What amounts to infringement.]—A man may take the trade mark of another ignorantly, not knowing it was the trade mark of the other; or he may take it in the belief, mistaken but sincerely entertained, that in the manner in which he is taking it he is within the law, & doing nothing which the law forbids; or he may take it knowing it is the trade mark of his neighbour, & intending & desiring to injure his neighbour by so doing. But in all these cases it is the same act that is done & in all these cases the injury to pltf. is just the same. The action of the ct. must depend upon the right of the pltf., & the injury done to that right. What the motive of deft. may be, the ct. has very imperfect means of knowing. If he was ignorant of pltf.'s rights in the first instance, he is, as soon as he becomes acquainted with them & perseveres in infringing upon them, as culpable as if he had originally known them (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—*SINGER" MACHINE MANUFACTURERS v. d. Right of person to appropriate to own use—Name suggested by trade.—A person may to some extent appropriate to his own use a name suggested by his trade, without infringing the law relating to trade marks or trade descriptions.—R. v. BAKAULLAH MALIK (1904), 1 L. R. 31 Calc. 411.—IND.

PART I. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

b. Exclusive user.—The essential elements of a legal trade mark are: (1) the universality of right to its use, i.e. the right to use it the world over as a representation of, or substitute for, the owner's signature; (2) exclusiveness of the right to use it.—

593. Infringement must be of mark as a whole.—The owners of a trade mark consisting of the words "Rugby Portland Cement," with other particulars, commenced an action to restrain defts. from infringing the trade mark & from executing orders for Rugby Portland Cement otherwise than by supplying pltf.'s cement & from using the word "Rugby" in connection with cement other than pltf.'s, & from passing off cement not of pltf.'s manufacture as & for pltf.'s, alleging that pltf.'s cement was known as "Rugby Portland Cement," & that "Rugby" where applied to Portland Cement, denoted pltf.'s cement, & no other. The only evidence as to infringement of the trade mark was that defts. supplied their cement to persons ordering Rugby & Rugby Portland Cement:—Held: (1) there was no evidence of any infringement of the trade mark as a whole, & that part of pltf.'s case failed on that ground; (2) the evidence showed that the terms "Rugby" & "Rugby Portland Cement" did not denote pltf.'s cement & no other, but were terms known in the trade as applied to cement from this district; (3) there was no evidence of deception on the part of defts.—RUGBY PORTLAND CEMENT CO., LTD. v. SUB-SECT. 2.—TESTS OF INFRINGEMENT.

A. In General.

595. Resemblances & differences — Whether arising naturally from necessity of case.—In an alleged infringement of a right to trade marks, the ct. must ascertain whether the resemblances & the differences are such as naturally arise from the necessity of the case, or whether, on the other hand, the differences are simply colourable, & the resemblances such as are obviously intended to deceive the purchaser. Pltf's, in the manufacture & sale of "Taylor's Persian Thread," had acquired a right to certain distinctive marks by invention & user for a long period:—Held: they were entitled to an injunction to restrain the adoption of such marks by a third party.

Semble, in granting injunctions, the ct. looks rather to the points of resemblance, & the intention of the parties in adopting them.—TAYLOR v. TAYLOR (1854), 2 Eq. Rep. 290; 23 L. J. Ch. 255; 22 L. T. O. S. 271.

600. — Use of different mark—Necessity for other indicia to show imitation.—(1) A trader may establish a trade mark by the use of a crest, & anything which amounted to an imitation of the crest as a trade mark would be restrained by the ct. But the use of a different crest by another trader, if ton accompanied by other indicia to make it a colourable imitation of the trade mark of pltf. will not be restrained.

(2) Pltf. laid by for two years before filing his bill for an injunction, having seen labels of deft. exhibited publicly, which he now complained of as being colourable imitations of his labels:—Held: such laches disentitled pltf. to relief.—BEARD v. TURNER (1868), 13 L. T. 746.

602. Manufacturer supplying goods to plaintiff—Mark on goods registered by plaintiff—Supply of same goods to defendants—No contract for exclusive supply to plaintiff.—Pltf., a cigar merchant in London, registered a label at Stationers' Hall, which he requested G., the manufacturer at Havannah who supplied him with cigars of a particular description, to affix to each box consigned to him. G. accordingly affixed the label, with his own name as manufacturer, to all boxes so consigned. Pltf. subsequently discovered that G. was supplying cigars of the same description, & with the same label, to defts., who were G.'s agents, & brought his action to restrain the alleged infringement of his trade mark. On a motion for an injunction against defts.:—Held: there being no evidence of any contract that G. should supply pltf. exclusively with that description of cigars, the ct. could not, on an interlocutory application, restrain defts. from using the label.—HIRSCH v. facturers of "Dunlop" pneumatic tyres, alleged that defts. had imported for sale in England tyres made by the French Dunlop co., which owned trade marks identical with those of the English Dunlop co. In an earlier action for a similar alleged infringement against a firm of B. & L., defts. in that action had submitted to an injunction & had undertaken to return to France the tyres complained of. Shortly afterwards, the business of B. & R. had been taken over by deft. co. It was alleged by deft. co. that six of the tyres as to which complaint was made by plffs. were tyres that had been ordered in the earlier action to be returned to France & accidentally had not been returned. Plffs. adduced evidence directed to prove an alleged sale of a tyre by defts. to an employee of plffs., & to prove that consignments of tyres from abroad to defts. had included French "Dunlop" tyres. Defts. adduced contrary evidence, & contended that plffs., having ascertained that the alleged infringing tyres were lying at the docks, & not having instituted criminal proceedings in respect of them, were disentitled to equitable relief:—Held: the sale of the six tyres was of relatively little importance; as to the alleged sale to plff.'s employee, the evidence of plffs. was to be accepted; there had been an importation by defts. of tyres, including French "Dunlop" tyres bearing the registered trade marks & registered design; & plffs. were not, by their conduct, disentitled to equitable relief. An injunction to restrain infringement of the trade marks & design was granted, with an order for delivery up or destruction & an inquiry as to damages. An application by defts. to be allowed to send the infringing tyres to their original source, as an alternative to delivery up, was refused.—*DUNLOP RUBBER CO., LTD. v. BOOTH (A. 608. Use of disclaimed part of mark.]—In 1876 Hubbuck & Son registered a trade mark, consisting of a representation of the Royal Arms with the words "White Zinc" below them, & the words "Hubbuck's Patent, London," arranged in circular form round the Arms & the other words. The trade mark was registered in class 1 for paints, user for twenty years prior to 1876 being claimed. In 1879, the Register was rectified by order of the Ct. by a memorandum, by which the then proprietor of the mark disclaimed any exclusive right to use the coat of arms or the words "White Zinc," or the word "Patent." In 1897, Thomas Hubbuck & Son, Ltd., the successors of Hubbuck & Son, & the proprietors of the trade mark, commenced an action against William Brown, Sons & Co., to restrain infringement of the trade mark, & passing off of deft.'s goods as the goods of plffs. Defts. used a mark consisting of the Royal Arms surrounded by the words "William Brown, Sons, & Co., Glasgow & London," which were between two concentric circles, & in a line below the circles the words, "White Zinc Paint" occurred. At the date of action, both plffs. & defts. used their marks by stencilling them in white on kegs of paint, plffs. putting the words "Trade Mark" in a line below their mark, & they both exported such kegs to Spanish-speaking countries, in which countries plffs. alleged that their mark had, by reason of the Royal Arms on it, acquired the name of "Dos Leones." Plffs. alleged a fraudulent course of conduct by defts. & their predecessors extending over a period of many years, & complained of the get-up of deft.'s goods. Defts. alleged long user by them of the Royal Arms in a circle, & acquiescence by plffs. They also alleged that the use by plffs. of the word "Patent" was a misrepresentation. It was held that the conduct of defts. had not been fraudulent; the distinctions between the marks were so obvious as to prevent any probability of deception; in view of the disclaimer, plffs. could not complain of the use by defts. of the Royal Arms, & if defts.' goods also acquired the name of "Dos Leones," by reason of their use of the Royal Arms, plffs., as they could not claim the exclusive use of such arms, could not complain. The action was dismissed:—Held: the trade mark was, in view of the disclaimer, only for a combination, & defts. had not taken that combination. On the passing off, plffs. had failed to establish their case.—HUBBUCK (THOMAS) & SON, LTD. v. BROWN (WILLIAM) SONS & CO. (1900), 17 R. P. C. 638, C. A.

609. Salesman on commission having right to mark—Salesman refusing to accept delivery of goods—Sale of goods by defendant at request of railway company.]—A salesman on commission may be the proprietor of a trade mark in respect of the goods which he sells on commission.

A trade mark may be registered in connection with vegetables & other natural products of the earth.

Plffs. were salesmen of vegetables on commission in Covent Garden market. They dealt largely in the vegetables of a grower named W., on whose care and skill in selecting, grading, & packing they knew they could rely. They registered a trade mark under classes 42 & 50 in Sched. III. to the Trade Marks Rules, 1890, & painted the same upon the baskets in which they sold the vegetables. Their practice was to send baskets with their trade mark upon them to W., who filled the baskets & forwarded them by rail to plffs. Plffs.' trade mark was well known & goods sold by them under that mark had a high reputation in the market.

Owing to a dispute between them & the railway co. plffs. refused to take delivery of nine baskets forwarded by W. as aforesaid. The railway co. then procured defts. under an indemnity to sell in the market the contents of the nine baskets. Defts. sold the contents in or from the baskets themselves:—Held: the vegetables so sold by defts. were the goods of plffs. by virtue of selection, certification, dealing with, or offering for sale within the meaning of Trade Marks Act, 1905 (c. 15), s. 3; there was nothing to prevent plffs. from registering a trade mark in connection with had since used in Newfoundland a certain trade mark in connection with tobacco. In 1915 they found that resp. was importing into & selling in Newfoundland tobacco bearing a similar mark. They thereupon registered their trade mark under the Newfoundland Trade Marks Act, & commenced an action against resp. for infringement. The trade mark upon the imported tobacco had been used in the United States from 1896, & it was "protected by law" in the United States, within the meaning of sect. 2 of the above-mentioned statute. Appls. when they adopted their trade mark were ignorant of the existence of the other trade mark:—Held: appls. were properly registered in Newfoundland in respect of their trade mark, & were entitled to an injunction against resp.—IMPERIAL TOBACCO CO. (NEWFOUNDLAND), LTD. v. DUFFY, [1918] A. C. 181, P. C.—NFLD.

610. User on defendants' goods.—Pltfs., who were the registered proprietors of trade marks consisting of or including the word "Carbotron" registered for fuel, brought an action to restrain infringement of trade marks, & passing off fuel not their goods as or for such goods by means of the use of the word "Carbotron" or otherwise, & moved for an interlocutory injunction. They alleged that fuel, not their goods had on two occasions been supplied by defts. in response to written orders, for "Carbotron" fuel, which orders were sent at the instance of pltfs. by hand to defts.' shop. There was a conflict of evidence as to what occurred on these occasions, but the receipts given referred to the goods merely as fuel, & defts.' shopman did not use the name "Carbotron," & he alleged that fuel was verbally asked for:—Held: there had been no infringement of trade mark, there having been no use of the word "Carbotron" upon or in connection with the goods of defts.; & the evidence did not establish that the attention of the defts.' shopman was drawn to the fact that "Carbotron" was ordered. The motion was refused.—PETERS (C. A.), LTD. v. DOMESTIC INVENTIONS CO. (1908), 25 R. P. C. 387.

B. Deception.

614. General rule—Infringing mark must be calculated to deceive.—(1) If A. has acquired property in a trade mark, which is afterwards adopted & used by B., in ignorance of A.'s right, A. is entitled to an injunction, but not to an account of profits or to compensation except in respect of any user by B. after he became aware of the prior ownership.

(2) The ct. must, however, be satisfied that the resemblance was such as would be likely to cause the one mark to be taken for the other.—EDELSTEN v. EDELSTEN (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 185; 7 L. T. 768; 9 Jur. N. S. 479; 11 W. R. 328; 46 E. R. 72, L. C.

615. — — — — ——It is not necessary, in order to give a right to an injunction, that a specific trade mark should be infringed; it is sufficient that the ct. should be satisfied that there was, on the whole, a fraudulent intention of palming off defts.' goods as those of pltf. But, in such a case, it is essential that the imitation should be necessarily calculated to deceive; & where it did not appear that any one had been, in fact, deceived, & a material part of pltf.'s peculiar marks had been omitted, the ct., notwithstanding strong circumstances of suspicion, refused to interfere.—WOOLAM v. RATCLIFF (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 259; 71 E. R. 113.

616. — — — — ——No trader can adopt a trade mark so resembling that of another trader that persons purchasing with ordinary caution are likely to be misled, though they would not be misled if they saw the two trade marks side by side. Nor can a trader, with even some claim to the mark or name, adopt a trade mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market as those of a rival trader.—SEIXO v.
